And over at Holden's things were going on in an odd groove. It was Kenyon who was a frequent visitor, there now, not Rolfe. Mrs. Holden was still in St. Louis with her olive branches, for the doctor had frankly told her that just so long as he had all these wounded on his hands the children would be in his way.

"He means me," said Jennie to Miss Guthrie, with prompt resentment. "But he says next month he'll come on here—business will require it as well as pleasure—pay us a ten days' visit and take us home. Then you'll come, too, won't you, Nita?" But Miss Guthrie shook her head.

"You promised us," said Mrs. Holden reproachfully; "and Rolfe won't be there to worry you this time," she faltered. "He's going to take a long leave and go abroad."

"But even that," wrote Jennie to her liege, "did not seem to comfort her. She says she will never, probably, visit Pawnee again; and I know well as can be it is all on account of that terrible fright. What can there have been behind it all? Now that the Twelfth is coming home and you have everything running smoothly, don't you think it possible to find out something about that strange affair? You have never written a word, and I can see Nita's eyes questioning me every time she knows I have a letter. The other day I was in her room and looking over some old albums that I drew from the bottom of a desk I came across a picture of hers just like the one that is in the little silver frame on the toilet table in her room at Pawnee, except that this was blurred and worn. 'Why, Nita!' I cried unthinkingly, as she entered, 'I thought you told me mine was the only one left of this kind, and here's one that looks as if it might have been worn next some fellow's heart and been kissed a million'— and then I stopped short and dropped it, for she had turned white as death and was stretching out her hands. 'Where did you find that?' she whispered at last. 'Between the leaves of this old album,' I said. 'It was lying there loosely.' 'I had not seen it for six years. I thought I had burned it with'——

"And then she broke off suddenly and shuddered, but seized it and took it away. If she would only talk to me of Jack; but she will not, even though I know that ever since the suicide of Mr. Percival last August Mr. Guthrie has been working day and night reopening the old matter. All the friends of the Guthries are now more than ever confident that Jack was absolutely innocent—that Mr. Percival as president of the bank had made away with those missing funds and securities and charged it to Jack and to his friend Harold Worden. An effort has been made to get at Mr. Percival's papers, all of them, but his widow is still so broken that she cannot be seen by any one, say her physicians. It is believed she knows something of the inner history of the whole case, and that she is striving to hide what she knows for her children's sake. Of course people say she has behaved very ill—that she ought to sell and restore to the bank real estate and property that from time to time Mr. Percival had settled upon her. But she only goes into hysterics when lawyers are mentioned.

"Mr. Guthrie is now in a highly nervous and excitable state, which naturally reacts upon Nita. I wish we could get her away from here. He went west, you remember, when he left her with us at Pawnee. He went in the hopes of finding some trace of Mr. Worden, so I learn now, and to urge the immediate return to St. Louis of Jack's old and intimate friend to demand justice at the hands of the Percivals, for he was ruined irretrievably by Percival's accusation when dismissed from the bank. But he has vanished utterly, and I know that they have about given him up for dead. A detective agency has been at work for months, and twice of late men have come to the house asking if it were not possible to find somewhere a picture of Mr. Worden; but Nita says none exist that she knows of. I believe that she burned all that she had.

"Why will she not trust me and tell me about it—she who used to have no secret from me? We know that he was deeply in love with her and that she was believed to care for him, but there was a fearful scene between him and Mr. Guthrie over poor Jack's body. The old gentleman was wild with grief, and in his misery he upbraided Worden as the cause of it all—accused him of being the thief and cursed him for concealing the crime at the expense of Jack's life and honor. Possibly he did believe it then, but since Percival's death everything is changed. I believe he would give all he owns to make amends to Worden now, and sometimes I think that that is what is killing Nita."

"'That that is what is killing Nita,'" read Holden again, this time half aloud, as he pondered over the word. Then a sound at the door attracted him. He glanced up quickly.

"Oh, come in, sergeant. I did not hear you knock."

"I beg your pardon, sir," was the answer, in Ellis' deep voice, a faint flush rising to his pale, black bearded face. "I knocked twice at the outer door, and then, knowing the doctor to be here, ventured into the hall. Am I too early, sir?"

"You are just in time. Come in. Shut that door and sit down. How's the arm to day, Ellis?"

Obediently the tall trooper had stepped within and closed the door, but he still remained erect, a shade of hesitation in his manner. "The arm seems doing well, sir."

"And yet you yourself do not pick up as I could wish. Take that chair, Ellis; we shall not be interrupted, and I want to talk with you about your case. You have won honor and troops of friends in this campaign, and when the regiment gets back and they find you pale and languid, so utterly unlike yourself and unfit to take your duties as first sergeant, they will say I was at fault. Can't stand that, you know, so I have spoken to Major Kenyon about the matter, and he has directed that you move out of the hospital forthwith and under my roof. No; keep your seat. You are to report to me for special duty in making up the field papers and reports, and I shall need you right here where I can supervise it all and look after you."

For a moment the two men sat gazing straight into each other's eyes. Then again, trembling slightly, Ellis strove to rise.

"Dr. Holden, I—I ought not to take advantage of this. Indeed I cannot."

"That will do, sir," was the quietly smiling reply. "Orders are orders, sergeant, and being a patient you are doubly under mine. What's more, you can ask no question until that chevron is replaced by the shoulder strap. Ellis, under what name shall the officers of the Twelfth ask that you be made one of their number?"

Making no reply, the sergeant bowed his head and covered his face with his hands.

Late that evening old Kenyon, dropping in to see the doctor, found the tall cavalryman seated at a desk in Holden's library, and, as he promptly arose and stood erect in acknowledgment of the presence of the post commander, the major strode straight up to him and held out his hand:

"Sergeant, I am as proud and pleased as your own father could be. When a whole regiment recommends a man for a commission, as this day's mail tells us, it's worth more than all the senatorial backing in Columbia. It may not fetch it, but I'd rather have it. Now, have you any friends to aid you?"

"None in the world, sir."

"No relatives? No kin? Not even a congressman?"

"Not even a congressman. A sister, perhaps; but that is all."

"Well, well, well! Never mind, though, my lad; we'll see you through. What you must do is get strong and well. You're but the ghost of yourself, and the doctor and I have moved you over here as a matter we owe the regiment. I thought you were told to go to bed an hour ago. Which is your room?"

"The doctor has given me the run of the top floor, sir, but mine is the front room on this side," answered Ellis gravely.

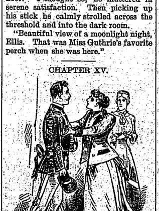
"Well, it's time for you to turn in, so I order it. Let me see. This is the twenty-fifth of January. A month from now, or two at most, I hope to see you with a strap on your shoulder, and long before that with the flush of health in your cheek. Now good night to you and pleasant dreams." And the major strode away.

Only an hour after sunset the silver disk of the moon had risen cloudless and unveiled, and now, as the bugle was calling the belated ones back to the post for night inspection of quarters, the burnished shield was high aloft, flooding the broad valley with its radiant sheen, throwing black shadows upon the broad roadway, the white picket fence, the glistening verandas at the post. Holden, returning from a late visit to some of his patients at the hospital, stopped and looked quickly and intently up at the little gallery overhanging the eastward wall.

In the front room, that which he had assigned to Ellis, a light burned dimly. The Venetian window of the rear room leading to the gallery was dark, yet open, and on the little ledge, leaning against the casement, the moonlight gleaming on his face and form, a tall soldier was gazing intently eastward. Quietly Holden strode along, entered the gate, went noiselessly into the hall and up the stairs. The door from Nita's room to the landing stood wide open. At this juncture a person standing outside would have seen the silent occupant of "Robbers' Roost" turn with sudden start and peer into the room, for Holden, his eyes fixed upon the gleaming, glistening space between the two rear windows and just over the toilet table, had purposely dropped his heavy stick with resounding clatter upon the landing floor. "I thought so," he muttered in serene satisfaction. Then picking up his stick he calmly strolled across the threshold and into the dark room.

"Beautiful view of a moonlight night, Ellis. That was Miss Guthrie's favorite perch when she was here."

CHAPTER XV.



Nita, with outstretched arms, throws herself forward to meet him.

A great city is draped in mourning. On every side, at half staff, the national flag hangs limp and lifeless in the moist and misty air, as though of its own volition drooping in honor of the soldier dead. Under the sodden skies, through thronged yet silent streets, in long, long column chosen detachments of soldiery are leading to its final resting place the shrouded clay of him who to such glorious purpose had led the Union blue in every field from the Mississippi to the sea, and who through long years of honored service ranked foremost on the rolls of the army—foremost perhaps in the great heart of the people. For days, as though in sympathy with the widespread grief, the heavens have poured their floods upon the brown and leafless slopes. All nature seems plunged in wintry gloom. The black smoke from a host of stacks and chimneys has settled down upon the silent city, covering it like a pall. From north and south, from east and west, battalions and batteries, national and state, have been concentrating to take part in the last honors to the illustrious chief, and dripping, yet disciplined, without the stir of martial music, the men have marched from the trains to the rendezvous assigned them about the town.

At last the hour has come. The weeping skies have checked their tears. The streets and sidewalks along the line of march swarm with citizens, whose hushed voices and reverent mien speak eloquently of their sense of the national loss. From many a stately mansion and modest homestead out beyond the business section festoons of black are fluttering in the rising breeze, the flag is twined with crape, the windows, balconies and steps are alive with spectators. And, far out on the westward avenue, on a sheltered portico that projects from a solid, old fashioned residence of cut stone and almost overhangs the street, there is gathered a little bevy of fair forms and faces which we saw together for the first time that Indian summery afternoon of the reception at Pawnee.

The rapid trot of orderlies and mounted police, sent ahead to warn the populace off the street and back to the sidewalk, and the distant wailing of cavalry trumpets far down the avenue, have told that now the funeral column is approaching; and from the warmth of the cozy parlor, well wrapped in mantles and furs, the ladies have come forth into the chilly February day—Mrs. Berrien, Mrs. Holden and her children; Winifred, whose soft cheeks are aglow and whose dark eyes turn instantly, eagerly toward the head of the advancing escort; Nita Guthrie, pallid, lanquid when unobserved by her guests, yet brightening instantly, bravely, when addressed, and striving to be her old gracious, radiant self for the sake of these and other visitors from Pawnee—for the Twelfth has been detailed especially to lead the escort of the great commander, and all the way from the frontier and only a few days home from the stirring scenes of its fierce campaign the regiment has been brought hither by the orders of a general who knows their worth as well he knows their wrongs and whose soldier heart has felt for them in all their trials.

It was in his power to give this honor to others, but though his own old regiment is within easy call, he means that the people shall see for themselves what manner of men are these whom press and pulpit have assailed, and against whose fair fame the shafts of slander have been hurled, only to fall blunted and broken or, like boomerangs, come hurling back about the ears of the thrower. Vindicated by the verdict of his peers, doubly vindicated by the highest powers of the land, gray haired Farquhar is chosen to command the escort, and, though the flower of the nation's soldiery marches in the funeral train this day, the eyes of all the gathered throng are strained to see and hail and honor the standard and the guidons of the men who bore the brunt of battle only two short months gone by.

And with the squadrons and the guns from Pawnee came such of the wounded officers as were well enough to be transported hither, and with them half a dozen of the ladies of the garrison. To the huge delight of the old battalion, two of whose troops are cruelly thinned in numbers now, the jovial major is permitted by Dr. Holden to mount "Old Glory" and take his position in front of the line. To the tremulous joy of Winifred Berrien, Mr. Brewster has telegraphed from Washington, whither he was summoned immediately after the close of the investigation at the agency, bidding them bring his horse and equipments, for even though he cannot draw saber he means to ride with "the black troop" on this day of days. She has not seen him since that wonderful morning when, like a young snow king, he burst through the fleecy barriers about them and stood before her rejoicing eyes their rescuer, her father's preserver, her lover, her hero; and ever since in his pride he has held aloof from her and all she holds dear. She can hardly hush the fluttering of her heart as now, near at hand, she hears the familiar strains of the trumpets of the Twelfth, still sounding the mournful dead march. Other ladies of the Twelfth are here—Mrs. Hazlett, Mrs. Gorham and Mrs. Warren; and small wonder can there be that their soft eyes fill with tears. Ever since the brief and bloody campaign the sad, solemn tones have been their daily music. The crape is not yet rusting on the sword hilts of their lords, worn in honor of poor Thorpe and Rand and Burrows, when it is renewed for the general in chief.

And now the crowds have drifted back from the asphalt. The platoon of mounted police has slowly clattered by. Then in long rank, boot to boot, muffled in their blue overcoats, the yellow lined capes turned back, led by their veteran chief and guiding their spirited grays with hardly a touch of rein, the trumpeters of the Twelfth cover the street from curb to curb, the brazen bells uplifted and pouring forth their mournful strains. A little space, and then, mounted on mettlesome bay in the rich housings of a general officer, there rides the marshal of the parade, followed by rank after rank of staff officers, all in the somber dark blue of the service. The autumn frosts of a vigorous life have silvered the strands at his temple and tinged with ruddy glow the cheeks of that firm and soldierly face, but the eyes gleam clear and clean as ever they shone a quarter century ago, when he and Farquhar spurred through the misty forest aisles about Dinwiddie and led the cheering troopers to the charge on Pickett's crouching line at the Forks. He knows the fair party on the Guthrie balcony at a single glance, and touches the visor of his forage cap as he moves slowly by, then summons an aid, gives him a low toned order, and the officer reins aside to let his comrades pass, then jogs back down the avenue to meet the column. And now necks are craning on every side, and a murmur runs along the crowded banquette, but for the solemn occasion of their coming. Eyes gleam and brighten; lips stir with inarticulate greeting; hands, kerchiefs and hats are waved in voiceless acclaim. Any other time and all the great city would burst into tumultuous cheer, for here rides gray haired Farquhar at the head of his staff, and just behind them, commanding the Twelfth, still pallid from his wounds, but erect and soldierly as ever, the senior major, dear old Berrien, lowers his saber in acknowledgment of the salute of the aid, bends his ear to listen to the message, glances quickly at the balcony into the smiling face of his wife, meeting Winifred's dark and glowing eyes, but shakes his head, motions to Dr. Holden, who is at his left rear, and ambles on. Holden nods appreciatively on receipt of what seems to be a similar message, reins out of column, followed by his orderly, dismounts at the side street, and presently is standing by his wife's side, welcomed most cordially by Miss Guthrie to the now crowded balcony.

> A murmur that fain would break forth in a cheer

In column of platoons stretching from walk to walk, clear across the street, ranks carefully aligned, every man's head and eyes straight to the front, the leading troops of the Twelfth are now clinking steadily by. Hazlett has glanced out of the corners of his eyes at the lovely picture on the gallery, but, riding at attention as they are, and on duty, he makes no sign. Randolph and Ridgeway, heading their platoons, strive to do two things at once—look as though they saw and appreciated the fluttering greetings of hand and handkerchief and smiling eyes to their right, and still look as though they did not see it at all. The sorrels, the grays have gone by, the bay troop is passing, and now yonder comes Gorham over on the other side of the street, the nearest he can get to his regulation position of four yards to the left of his leading platoon, and out from the sheltering screen of tree branches and in front of the center of the first subdivision of the blacks, his saber arm still in its sling, his face pale with confinement and suffering, but tall and stalwart rides Curly.

"Oh, there's Mr. Brewster! Mr. Brewster! Oh, why doesn't he look?" cries Miss Guthrie, as the handkerchiefs begin waving furiously, and fair, eager faces press forward in the effort to attract his attention—all but Winifred, who, though bravely smiling like the rest, is clutching with trembling hands the back of her mother's chair and shrinking behind her mother's form. It is impossible for him not to see the fluttering signals. He half glances toward that thronging gallery, and in a second the light leaps to his eyes, a flush to his pallid cheek. Instinctively his arm twitches in the effort of the hand to reach the cap visor, and the instant twinge of shooting pain brings him to his senses. He has one brief, fleeting look, however, at the beaming face he loves, and he has just time for a half gesture with the bridle hand, a little nod, and then, as on he rides, he feels rather than sees that one sweet face that beamed upon him has suddenly paled, that one graceful form is now staggering back into Holden's waiting and expectant arms. Only two platoons in the black troop today, for the others sleep beneath the wintry sod or still languish in the hospital ward. Only two platoons. Brewster heads the first; a tall, dark eyed, dark mustached sergeant the second.

"There's Sergeant Ellis!" cries Mrs. Berrien, in her pride and pleasure. "And he's shaved off his beard. Did you ever see him look so young and well?"

But Mrs. Holden, too, has turned, and does not heed. Her watchful eyes, her attentive ears, have other work to do. Obedient to her husband's touch, she has drawn close to his side. It is into her arms and his that, with one quick, gasping, stifled cry, Nita Guthrie has fallen as though stricken by a bolt from heaven. It is by these loving arms the limp and prostrate form is quickly borne within and laid upon the sofa, and Holden whispers to his devoted wife, "It is all clear now."

That night, the long ceremonies of the day concluded, a throng of fair women and brave men are gathered in the parlors and corridor of the great hotel. Down in the marbled court below some Italian musicians are playing soft, sweet music. Out in the street, under the glare of the electric light, a fine regiment of state troops has drawn up in long extended line and is standing at ease while its officers are bidding farewell to a host of friends upon the walks below. Here and above are soldiers of all branches of the service, who with the morning's sun will be scattering to their stations again. Some are clustered in the broad vestibules and on the office floor. Others, the juniors mainly, are paying their respects to the wife of the commanding general and to the ladies of the Twelfth, for on the morrow they, too, with the regiment, take flight for their prairie home.

The hour is late, and several of those present have just come in from a somewhat subdued and quiet entertainment given in their honor at one of the beautiful homes of the city. The solemn nature of the duty that has called them hither precludes the possibility of any general gathering, but the dinner to which the Berriens and others were bidden has lasted so long that Winifred began to believe it would never end, and Mrs. Berrien has seen all too plainly that, though she strove to appear joyous and appreciative, her daughter longed to leave the scene and return to the hotel, where, as was well known, many of the officers were to spend the evening. Not until nightfall had the Twelfth passed by on its return from the march to the distant cemetery, and as they jogged along at ease one or two of the troop or platoon commanders, in answer to joyous hail from the sidewalk, had reined out of column by old Berrien's permission and dismounted under the portico, but Brewster, smiling, had shaken his head and gone on with his blacks to the muddy cantonment far down at the southern verge. Winifred was already dressed for dinner. She had hastened to her room as soon as they returned from the Guthries', and Mrs. Berrien made no comment. She well understood that the girl's one thought was to be ready to welcome if he should come. There was no telling at what minute he might be announced. And though they were not to leave the hotel until nearly seven, Winifred was ready at four. The mother heart yearned over her child as she saw how the shadows deepened in her dark eyes when the column went on out of sight in the wintry gloaming, Brewster with it.

At that moment she could almost share her husband's idea of bringing the young man to his knees then and there. What business had he playing the indifferent in this utterly unsoldierly fashion? How dare he treat Winifred with coldness? She had done him no wrong. Not since that night of the last hop at Pawnee, the night the marching orders came, had there been opportunity for the girl to speak to him at all. Of course the major had been brusque and repellent and had virtually forbidden his further attentions; but, heavens, that was not Winifred's doing, and both the major and herself had endeavored to show him, without unnecessary allusion to the matter, that whatsoever might have been the suspicions or impressions aroused by the singular conduct of that middle aged married flirt at Pawnee, they no longer entertained the faintest ill opinion of him. Indeed, Mrs. Berrien never had. Blue blooded herself, her faith in bon sang was deep rooted. She had always liked Brewster, but she was a loyal wife and would in no wise act counter to her husband's wishes. It was now, when Mr. Brewster seemed allowing his pride and resentment to prompt him to this undeserved and cruel wounding of her daughter's heart, that Mrs. Berrien first felt any unkindliness. She could have made him suffer for it, but that she knew it would hurt Winifred as well. Without a word, but just so soon as the last of the yellow cape linings disappeared from view, Winifred had turned from the parlor and again sought her room. Mrs. Berrien sent a bell boy for Mr. Randolph, who, having dismounted at the entrance, was standing, the center of a group of friends, in the marble floored office below, and Randolph came up with the next trip of the elevator.

"Do you go with us to the dinner at the A——s' tonight, Mr. Randolph?"

"No, Mrs. Berrien; I believe only those who are so fortunate as to be the husbands of certain ladies of the Twelfth are bidden. We are going to have a little gathering here to see Curly off."

"And where does Curly go—and when?"

"Back to Washington by the first train, Mrs. Berrien. He's been offered a detail at the war department."

"How delightful that is for Mr. Brewster! Why, the Twelfth is getting some little recognition after all. Up to this moment the general's welcome home is the only word we've had from a soul. Then you'll all be here tonight, will you?"

"Most of us. Rolfe's here, too," laughed Randolph, "but he sat in a deep window during the procession and doesn't mean to show in public yet. I'm told he wants to make up with Curly before he goes tonight, but Curly won't let him." And Randolph knit his brows. "I wouldn't if I were Brewster. Wouldn't it be odd if they took the same train, though? I suppose he won't care to exhibit that new cheek of his to Miss Guthrie. Will she be here after the dinner?"

"I doubt it, Mr. Randolph. Miss Guthrie is not at all well. She had a sinking spell of some kind this afternoon during the parade, and has not left her room since. Say to Mr. Brewster for me that we shall hope to see him before he leaves, will you? We'll be back about ten o'clock."

But it is after ten, long after, that now they are gathered in the parlors, and music, laughter and the sound of merry voices ring through the wide corridors. Winifred, the wistful look gone from her dark eyes, a soft flush on her cheek, is standing near one of the high windows, the center of a group of ladies and officers, among whom at this moment is Brewster, his right arm still in its sling. Though she strives after her first fluttering welcome not to glance at him again, just now at least she cannot quiet control her eyes. She cannot but mark with shy delight how her father's broad palm is laid upon her hero's shoulder as the veteran trooper looks into the younger soldier's face with an expression she is thankful to see. All around the big, stiffly furnished, formal room, with laughter and with gladness old friends are meeting again for the first time in years—one at least of the joys of our nomad army life. The buzz of conversation, the remarks of Mr. Ridgeway, who clings to her side, and the sweet, thrilling strains of "Rigoletto" floating up from the rotunda, fall upon listless ears. Winifred is striving to catch his words, for now her mother has joined them, and her cordial, kindly voice mingles with those about her. She cannot hear what is said except in mere snatches, a word here and there, but she can, and does see that, though thoroughly courteous, Brewster is dignified, almost unresponsive. When her father makes some jovial allusion to his narrow escape at the Porcupine and would apparently refer to Brewster's rush to the rescue, the latter seems to waive it aside and turn at once to another subject. Why will he be so—so unlike his old self?

Hark! From the street below the ringing call of the bugle! Randolph pokes his head in through the other window:

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

See A. D. Morris' ad and call at his store on Robert street for bargains in jewelry. He expects to leave Crookston about Nov. 15th, and will dispose of his stock regardless of cost. Now is the time to catch on while they go at any price.

CALL IN ORDER FOR HEARING.

[First publication Nov. 3rd. 1892.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA, COUNTY OF POLK ss. District Court, 14th Judicial District.

In the matter of the estate of David L. Lusian —Insolvent.

It appearing to the court that Adolph F. Rauch, the assignee of the above named insolvent, has converted all the property and assets of said insolvent into money and is now ready to render a final account of his proceedings as such assignee and pay to the several creditors who have proved their claims the amount they may be entitled to, it is therefore ordered: That said assignee make a final account of his proceedings before this court at general term thereof to be held at Warren, Marshall county, Minn., on the 21st day of November A. D. 1892, at the opening of the court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard and that all creditors and the insolvent debtor then and there show cause why the account of said assignee should not be allowed as presented and why he should not be discharged from said trust upon the payment to the several creditors of the amount of dividend that is found due them by the court.

Let this order be served on the insolvent debtor and the creditors who have proved their claims, by a publication of this order in the Polk County Journal for two weeks, commencing November 3rd 1892 and by mailing a copy thereof to the insolvent debtor and to said creditors if their address is known to said assignee.

Dated Oct. 29th 1892.

By the court.

Grand closing out sale of jewelry watches, clocks and silverware at A. D. Morris store on Robert street. Remember, anything you want in jewelry you can get at a bargain.

Tom Morris' holiday stock of jewelry, silverware, watches etc., is beginning to arrive. A larger and more complete stock than ever before brought to Crookston. He invites a call.

Don't forget that A. D. Morris will stay but a few days longer and he intends to dispose of his stock before he goes. Call and see what he can do for you in jewelry, watches, clocks or silverware.

If you need anything in the line of watches, clocks, silverware or jewelry of any kinds, call on A. D. Morris' at his jewelry store and take advantage of his great closing out sale. They go without regard to cost to close out. It will pay you to bear this in mind and call.

Tollef J. Farden was in from Tilden last week and called in to leave us some cash on subscription. It is such visits as these that does wonders to brace up the hard-working newspaper man and supply him with the sinews of war. We have on our list a number that we are convinced COULD square up with us if they would and we are needing our money this fall very much.

The steamer "Viking," owned by Capt. Eberhart, plying between Thief River Falls and Red Lake, is fitted up comfortably for the accommodation of passengers, making the trip one of the most delightful that can be made at this season of the year. The Viking leaves Thief River Falls for the Red Lake agency every Tuesday, returning on Friday and will make regular trips until navigation closes. [28tf]

The fall weather has been most propitious for fall work and the farmers seem to have improved it to the utmost as they have their threshing all done and the plowing nearly if not all done. While the farmers have paid sufficient attention to matters political they have not allowed politics to interfere with their work and with the good weather they have had they will go into the winter in pretty good shape.

Now that the election is over and you have time to think, please think of that little subscription—if you are in arrears and let us hear from you. We do not like to be constantly dunning and we do not like to make extra expense for any of our patrons but we have some names on our list that are too far in arrears to be profitable for us and we are determined to have some kind of a settlement this fall. Among these there is not one who has not had due and timely warning, both through these columns and by statements sent him so that if any find extra costs made they certainly are alone to blame for we have done all we can to avoid it. It is simply now a matter of business, the money is justly due us and if we cannot collect it we desire to know why. No man who intends to pay his just debts can object, and if we have any names on the list who do not intend to pay the sooner we get it into a different shape—a form that he will probably respect and have done with him the better we shall be suited. We pay honest money to our help to make this paper and we only ask a square deal in return. If there is anything wrong with this, let us know at once and we are willing to make it right.

Be sure to see what Sture can do for you before you purchase.

The Aamold concert on Monday evening was well attended and highly enjoyed by all.

Some of the challengers at the polls were disposed to be a trifle too fresh until they were called down once or twice.

There are some features of the Australian ballot system that we do not like a little bit, but there are some features that do very well.

I. U. Jennings does not advertise a few articles at "way down prices" to catch you on the balance but sells everything at "way down prices."

The ladies of the Episcopal church society, announce that their next social will be given at the residence of Conductor W. H. Norrie, on Tuesday evening of next week.

Remember that A. Sture, in the opera house block is prepared to give great bargains for cash. A very little money buys stacks of goods of Sture. Try it once.

Do you know Herb carries a full stock of musical goods from a mouth organ to a guitar? Everything it that line you need he has and he invites you to call and look him over.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings can always be found at her old stand on Robert street ready to show you the latest and most approved styles of millinery and will sell at prices corresponding to the times.

A. Sture calls attention to his full and complete stock of dry goods and groceries and invites our readers to call and look him over. A little money will buy lots of goods at Sture's.

Owing to his wife's contined illness A. D. Morris has decided to go out of the jewelry business in this city and offers his entire stock for sale at prices away down. Call early for choice. (28tf)

The ladies report having cleared $75 on the Aamold concert. Very well done but it required an immense amount of work to accomplish. The ladies worked like beavers to accomplish the result and are deserving of good credit. Twice the sum they cleared would not have been more than they deserved.

It is no use denying it. Crops are poor and the price of wheat is too low. The question arises for every farmer how to make ends meet and have some money to spare. We have one suggestion to make. It is this "read Locken & Holmboe,s adds" or better still visit their store and see how far a dollar goes at that place.

THE JOURNAL wants your job work and we are better prepared than ever to give perfect satisfaction in style, quality and price. It will be to your advantage when needing job work to let the JOURNAL figure on it for you. Don't forget that we are in the business and fully prepared for all kinds of work and WE ARE BOUND TO PLEASE YOU at all hazards.

Sylvester & Finseth, having got settled in their new quarters are now prepared to welcome all of their old friends and patrons and as many more as care to call on them, and to show as full and complete line of hardware as was ever brought to the city. Go elsewhere to look but go to Sylvester & Finseth to buy.

If you are a true, progressive business man you want people to know what you are doing and where you are doing it. The JOURNAL can place your advertisement before a live progressive constituency whom it will pay you to invite into your place of business. Try the JOURNAL's advertising columns and you will not regret it. Call and see us and let us make you figures on advertising.

Wm. Erdmann is rushing the work on the new jail as fast as the weather permits. He has the walls of the first story completed and will, the weather permitting soon be through with the balance of it. Erdmann, while not making quite as much fuss as some of them, is a first-class workman, just the same as the many samples of his work in the city fully attest. If you have any brick-work to do, get Erdmann to figure on it for you and if you get him to do your work you will be sure that it is well done.

A serious landslide at the foot of Third Street, caused by the large amount of dirt the railroad company piled into raise their grade, crushed in the mouth of the sewer, damaging it to the extent of some $2000 it is said. Some apprehensions are felt that the needed repairs cannot be made this fall which would result in serious inconvenience to our city next spring. The expense of fixing up will be great as, in all probability the company will be obliged to drive piles in the river bed and build up a wall, using brush to bind up the embankment. Coming at this time of year, the expense of fixing it up will probably be greater than if it had occurred in the summer. A few weeks open weather just now would be highly appreciated.

The banks all enjoyed a holiday on Tuesday.

Martin Lally came down from Leach Lake to vote.

Attorney Havrevold was over from East Grand Forks on Monday.

Chabot is getting his new store in elegant shape and is doing a rushing business.

A. Grindeland was down from Warren to attend the rally on Saturday evening.

Lots of hay coming to the market these days. As a result the price is not very high.

Geo. W. Peake is preparing to move to Minneapolis where he will reside in the future.

If you want fine job work at reasonable figures call at the JOURNAL job-rooms.

If you are curious to know how far a dollar will go in dry goods, go to Sture's, opera block.

Comrade Snider intends to go into the woods and get out 1000 cords of wood this winter for the city market.

Frank E. Hunt and Stephen J. Sprague, of Red Lake Falls was seen at the rally on Saturday evening.

And now that the excitement of the campaign is all over, we can settle down to the arduous duties of every-day life.

Doc. Rutledge, of the Fisher Bulletin, was one of the most numerous republicans in the business on Saturday evening.

H. B. Davis was one of the prominent republicans of Red Lake Falls in attendance at the rally on Saturday night.

Williams & Roberts have placed their stock temporarily in the store lately vacated by Larsen, Carpenter & Co.

Thos. Erwin, Thos, Nesbit, A. J. Goodwin and A. G. Rutledge were among the Fisherites who attended the rally Saturday night.

Joe Reynolds, of Grant county, was up on Saturday evening and took in the great rally at the opera house. Said it was one of the biggest he has seen this year.

W. W. Fegan, the genial station agent of the Great Northern railway, who has been laid up for a couple of weeks with catarrh of the kidneys, resumed his duties again last Friday.

Experts claim that potatoes will be very high next spring. It is said that there are not enough potatoes in Polk County to supply the home demand and leave enough for seed.

Mrs. Chas. E. Stanton, who has been visiting in the city the guest of Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Dampier started for her home on Monday evening. She was accompanied as far as St. Paul by Mrs. Dampier.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co. have removed to the property which they purchased last summer on the corner of Robert street and Broadway, occupied during the summer by Sylvester & Finseth as an implement warehouse.

Everybody, republicans as well as democrats and populists unite in saying that the rally on Saturday evening was the largest of the kind seen in Crookston during the campaign. Some say the torch light procession was the biggest one Crookston ever had. It was a fine one at all events.

J. S. Nichols came up in the rain on Thursday last to sell some beef cattle. Nichols says he has his horned stock all sold that he has to spare and goes into the winter with no surplus stock on hand. Nichols is one of those farmers who always manages to have something to sell and he seems to be gaining in wealth right along.

Mayor A. E. Maglone was over from Rugby junction N. D., on Monday on legal business. The mayor was at one time one of the most valued members on the Fargo Argus staff and Major Edwards used to think he could not keep house without Maglone. He is now one of the leading attorneys at Rugby and is coining lots of wealth in that profession.

Julius Berg was in to see us on Thursday evening with a grievance onto him bigger'n a last year's hornets' nest—and twice as hot, all because—as he said; "there are so many prohibitionists in Euclid that a man can't get through town with whiskey no how." Said he: "I left Crookston for home at 3 o'clock to-day. When I got to Euclid I hitched my pony and went into the office for my mail and when I came out some doggoned prohibitionist had stolen all the whiskey I had. At first I thought it was done for a joke, but I soon came to the conclusion that whoever got it wanted it pretty bad and intended to keep it so there was nothing to do but to come back to town for more and I just want to caution everybody to be careful how they attempt to carry whiskey through Euclid as there seems to be some there who have a morbid desire to acquire whiskey on the cheap."

Prof. Casad left Wednesday even for Rock Island, Ill.

Call at Veronneau & Adams for bargains in millinery. Special sales on and after Tuesday next.

The New York Store will hold its grand opening on Friday and Saturday, November 11 and 12.

L. I. Benoit is moving his grocery stock into his new store next door north of the old stand and is daily receiving new and fresh goods.

Ladies, we would cordially invite an inspection of our fall and winter cloaks when preparing for cold weather. Prices to suit the times.

A. STURE.

Frank Creamer: "I have not decided yet what I will do with the post-office and the land-office. Have not quite recovered my breath from the surprise of it all."

Miss Nellie Brewster, of Fisher, passed through Crookston Monday last enroute for Maple Bay where she has been engaged to teach a three months term of school.

The JOURNAL is pained to learn that Mrs. Casper Sands, who returned last week from St. Paul where she had been under treatment for a tumor is in a very critical condition and it is feared that she cannot long survive.

If you want a bargain in cottons, unions or all-wool flannels, call at once on A. Sture, Opera block.

Mrs. Henry Peterson arrived last Saturday to see her sister, Mrs. Casper Sands, who is afflicted with a tumor and not expected to live.

The JOURNAL is pleased to announce that Mrs. Cora Underhill, who for months has been a great sufferer from rheumatism, is improving encouragingly. For a long time she was absolutely helpless.

Special sale of dress goods to-morrow (Friday) at the New York

A. STURE.

On dit that one of our most popular young business men is to be married very soon to a Wisconsin lady, and W. D. Wilson said to a JOURNAL reporter: "You may say that I will be the next one on deck."

W. D. Wilson: "This cold snap has brought me an excellent trade. Have been on my feet so much this week that I am about played out. If I could hear for a fact that Harrison is elected I could go to bed and rest serenely."

Manager Peterson of the Crookston Water Power and Light Co., met with an accident at the power house on Monday by which he loses a finger. In some way he caught the finger in some machinery and it was so badly lacerated and crushed as to render amputation necessary. He goes about with his arm in a sling as a consequence.

Forty boxes of ladies' gent's and children's rubbers and overshoes—first-class goods at lowest possible prices. A. STURE.

The JOURNAL is informed that conductor J. B. Copeland, who recently went out to Seattle as superintendent on a new division, on the Great Northern road, is delighted with the country and will accept the position and remain. It is reported that Mr. Hill told him before he went, that if he did not like it out there he could return and take his old place on the road here.

A number of the friends of Register John Locken met at his residence on Monday evening to pay him a farewell visit ere he leaves for California to spend the winter in hopes to benefit his health. As an evidence of their high regard for Mr. Locken and his wife they brought along an elegant sideboard and a number of books. Mr. Locken's many friends unite in the hope that the trip may do him much good.

R. H. Carr came in on Wednesday with the returns from the town of Columbia. Says the people's party ticket got a large majority of the votes cast. There were 85 votes cast and Donnelly received 65 of those. Two years ago Owen received 69 votes in Columbia. The reports so far received shows that Donnelly will not get near as many votes as Owen did and that is what the JOURNAL has predicted right along. When the farmers allowed the Donnelly-Fish outfit to bounce Owen they did a very foolish thing.

C. M. C. Stewart, the importer, of Mason City, Iowa, has sold the grandly bred stallion MacCalmen 6,218 (1,316), (6,795) sired by Master of Blantyn (2,283), dam Lily of Hillhead 7,973, to the following farmers living west of Crookston: Andrew Klevin, Ole Christianson, M. B. Christianson, John Anderson, H. B. Christianson, Ben Henry and Martin Finseth. These gentlemen are to be congratulated on securing such a splendid animal and one of the best bred Clydesdale stallions in the state. This stallion must be seen to be appreciated, as he is by far the best stallion owned in northern Minnesota.

Next Saturday, November 12th, the New York store will make a specialty of shawls, blankets, flannels of all kinds, ladies hosiery, furnishing goods, etc. Don't miss this opportunity.

Knute Opheim was up from Fertile on Wednesday.

Martin Sands was in from the north part of the county on Wednesday.

Frank Benoit was visiting with relatives and friends in the city last week.

All-wool storm serges, 46 inches wide, regular price $1.25, for 99 cents to-morrow at the New York store.

Shoes, shoes, all kinds, latest styles, lowest prices. A. STURE,
Opera Block.

Last Saturday night Ed. Walsh had the front windows of his house nicely illuminated and decorated with bunting hung around a picture of Knute Nelson, and when the monster procession was passing, cheer after cheer went up from the marching republicans.

Fisher did nobly for the cause last Saturday evening—something like 150 people coming up from there to join in the big doings.

Saake, the Robert street jeweler, has a full and complete stock to choose from, and can give as good bargains as can be had anywhere in the city. Try him.

45-inch all-wool Henriettas, in all colors, regular price $1.25, to be sold to-morrow at the New York store for 99 cents.

Ira C. Richardson, republican candidate for county attorney, was making friends in the city last week and this office acknowledges a pleasant call. Richardson will yet come to the front in county politics.

Call at A. Sture's and secure one of those lovely flannel dress patterns, 54 inches wide, only 50 cents per yard.

Our elegant fall weather caught a slight cold on Sunday, resulting in a slight snow storm and a gentle reminder of winter on Monday. Just enough to remind one of storm-windows if he hadn't put them on yet.

Dr. A. Nelson brought up a crowd of enthusiastic republicans from Fertile on Saturday evening to attend the big republican rally at the opera house. Doc. is never happier than when doing something to help on the good cause.

Gentlemen, it will pay you to examine our stock of fall and winter caps before purchasing elsewhere. Something to please all classes.

A. STURE.

Our next attorney general, H. W. Childs, gave this office a pleasant call last Saturday. He complimented our city very highly upon the spirit of enterprise observable in the many improvements that have been made this summer and predicts a great future for Crookston. Mr. Childs predicted the success of the republican ticket, both state and national.

Blankets, blankets, all the way from $1 up to $6.50—beauties—all wool—at A. Sture's.

Mr. R. Casmey was in from Euclid on Wednesday with the returns from that town. Although unable to give exact figures he said that Harrison, Donnelly, McKinnon, Ives and Carruth had majorities. There were 44 votes cast in the town.

L. S. Hancock was down from Euclid on Tuesday.

C. W. Clifford of Missouri has accepted a position in Stadsvold's jewelry store.

Ladies, don't forget the special sale of millinery at Veronneau & Adams' next Tuesday.

N. H. Stadsvold of Lansing, Iowa, is visiting his cousin, J. S. Stadsvold.

W. G. Hunt, the McIntosh News man was in on Wednesday to listen to the result of the ballots.

A. H. Cleveland brought in the Grove Park returns. Says the people's party had the majority there. Mr. Cleveland will leave for his old home in Michigan soon to spend the winter.

Andrew Steenerson was up from the west side on Wednesday to see how the returns panned out. He did not seem to be overly pleased.

On and after Tuesday, November 15th, Veronneau & Adams will dispose of their entire stock at special sale to close out. Remember that great bargains can be secured. Do not fail to call and see for yourself.

The streets were made extremely slippery by the rain of Sunday, making navigation for pedestrians an exceedingly dangerous operation.

It required nearly all day Wednesday to finish the count in the city—very much longer than required by the old method.

Fontaine & Anglim are offering unheard of bargains in fall and winter clothing, as you will see by calling at their mammoth store and examining their stock. Anything you want at any price you want.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs wrote to a friend in this city last week that she expected to start this week for California, hoping to reach there by the last of this week. The JOURNAL and hosts of other friends wish her a safe journey,

Thos. H. Stevens, the genial Warren Sheaf man, gave this office a pleasant call on Wednesday. Mr. Stevens although a dyed-in-the-wool republican, was an independent candidate for county attorney in Marshall county at the last election and as yet we have not heard how he comes out, but here is hoping that he won. He is every way worthy and well qualified.

Comrade Jim Kelley came in from Badger town on Tuesday evening and reported that, as near as he could get at it, Badger was voting almost solid people's party. This town gave a solid alliance vote at last election, giving 72 votes for Owen, but Jim thinks that Nelson gets a few votes there, while the people's party county ticket will probably be as solid as two years ago.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure at Druggists.

If you want to purchase a half section of land, all under cultivation, at a great bargain call and see us. We know of such a place within two miles of the city limits that can be had cheap, as the owner wishes to put the proceeds into other business. One hundred acres of the land was broken last year. Good buildings, good well and good fences on the place. One of the best farms for a stock farm we know of in this vicinity. It is a bargain, [30 tf]

Japanese Artificial Teeth.

Some few years ago a young Japanese of good family come to this country to study the art, or, as we ought now, in justice, to call it, the science, of dentistry. He brought with him an example of the artificial-plate work of his people, which he had picked up somewhare. It was a rim of hard wood very skillfully carved, in which were set pointed pegs of steel. This was one of the sets of teeth which, from time immemorial the dentists of this nation had constructed for the toothless who still retain an appetite, though the machinery for its indulgence had disappeared. This curious denture was used merely for mastication, and was removed and scoured as soon as the meal was concluded.—From "Modern Dentistry," in Demorest's Family Magazine for December.

"Gone Democratic."

On the N. P. train going south last Thursday evening was a company of jolly St. Paul business men who had been up in Dakota hunting for the festive wild goose. At Detroit a traveling man got on who was acquainted with the party, greeted them and inquired what luck they had had. "None at all," said one of the hunters; the geese have all gone!" "What," said the traveling man, "the geese all gone south this early?" "South nothing," said the other in disgust, "they have all gone—democratic!"

The general and sectional meetings of the thirtieth annual session of the Minnesota Educational Association to be held in St. Paul, December 27th, 28th and 29th, promises to be far more interesting and instructive than those of any previous year. Among the subjects to be considered are civics, history, penmanship, music, state high school course of study, our exhibits at the Columbian Exposition and several roundtable talks on various topics. As the text-book question will come before the legislature this winter it will receive proper attention. The state superintendent will hold a conference with county superintendents and the teachers in the several schools on the first day of the session. On the 27th it is expected that there will be a high school declamatory contest. On the evening of the 28th there will be a lecture by Gen. Lew Wallace upon some literary subject. His well known ability as a popular writer and lecturer insures a pleasant and profitable evening. The usual reduction of rates is promised upon the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the "Soo," the St. Paul and Duluth, as well as the roads belonging to the western passenger association. Hotel rates will be very reasonable.

Owing to his wife's contined illness A. D. Morris has decided to go out of the jewelry business in this city and offers his entire stock for sale at prices away down. Call early for choice. (28tf)

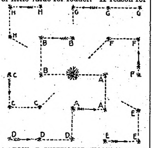
FARM AND GARDEN

HARVESTING CORN.

A Plan That Will Save Labor and Prevent Waste of Corn Fodder.

While the inventors of harvesting machines are making successful progress in constructing machinery drawn by horses for cutting the corn crop, the great majority of the corn fields in the country at large are still harvested by means of hand labor, and the following suggestions from The Country Gentleman are offered with a view to abridge labor and prevent much of the existing waste by the needless exposure of the corn fodder:

The practice of planting corn in "hills" is still very largely pursued, and when the crop is ripe enough and the grain is well hardened it is cut by hand and secured in shocks. These remain several weeks till the season arrives for husking and stacking, during which time the shocks are exposed to storms, and a portion of them are beaten down, soaked with rain and rotted so as to be of little value for fodder. A reason for this waste is the one sided way in which the shocks are built. Instead of placing the stalks in an equal circle around the center, they are often placed nearly all on one side, pressing them more or less out of the center, giving the shocks a one sided tendency and entirely prostrating a portion of them. This waste could be prevented by taking the necessary care to build them with equal additions on every side and thus giving them a firmly erect position.



A REGULAR SYSTEM FOR SHOCKING CORN.

A regular system of cutting each shock can be adopted, saving time and labor, which the accompanying figure may explain. The field is cut by taking five rows of hills at a time and placing the shocks in the center one. Twenty-five hills will make one shock, the center being the first taken; all the others are cut and placed around it. If the corn is of a large variety, three hills will be as much as the operator will hold in the grasp of his left arm while he cuts them with his right hand and places them against the forming shock. In the figure the shock is larger and in the center, and the first three hills are those indicated by the letters A A A, carried to the shock on the dotted line. The next three are B B B, cut and placed beside the others. Each successive three are marked by the letters CCC, DDD, EEE, FFF, GGG and HHH, and being taken and cut in this regular order they will be placed in separate positions equally all around the shock, and the laborer can hardly avoid making it equally upright.

This system will abridge steps and make the work much easier than cutting at random. As every shock requires the same order the operator soon becomes accustomed to it and works rapidly. The same general course will apply to larger shocks or to those made of smaller corn. With slight modification it will apply to corn in drills. The arrows show the direction for the operator to work. In making a single shock, if the hills are three and a half feet apart, it will require about ten rods walking, and for a field of a hundred shocks more than three miles, while with an irregular mode, without system, several miles would be required. Saving the fodder would be still more important, making all the difference between such as is fresh, green and uninjured, and that which is destroyed by prostration and rotting with rains.

Interesting Farm Statistics.

According to the census returns, farm lands in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio and Michigan are practically of equal value and are rated from $33.74 to $65.16 per acre. The next in value are Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, valued at $23.80 to $32.33 per acre. Following these come Iowa, Colorado, Utah and California, valued at $22.92 to $25.62 per acre. Then follow Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, Oregon and Washington at $5.80 to $14.45 per acre.

Census statistics further show that in 1890 there were in the United States 4,008,907 farms, 74.5 per cent. of which were cultivated by the owners, 8 per cent. by tenants who paid money rental and 17.5 per cent. by tenants on shares. Illinois had the greatest number of farms—viz., 255,741. Ohio comes next with 247,189. New York had 241,058 and Pennsylvania 218,542. Arizona had only 767 and Nevada 1,404.

Ponderosa Tomatoes.

The editor of The Rural New Yorker writes regarding the Ponderosa: "One day last week we saw twelve Ponderosa tomatoes that weighed 17½ pounds. The largest weighed two pounds three ounces, or thirty-five ounces. One of them was, after weighing, cut open. We had never before seen so large a proportion of flesh as compared with the pulp, and the seeds were so few that it would scarcely pay a grower to collect them for less than ten dollars a pound. These tomatoes were quite regular in form, and their only imperfection was that they were still green about the stems."

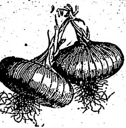
FARM AND GARDEN

ONIONS.

Harvesting, Curing and Storing—Popular Market Varieties.

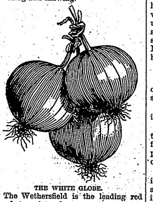
When the bulbs of onions growing for market have reached their full size and maturity, as indicated by the dying down of the tops, the crop is ready to be harvested. Pull the onions by hand or rake them out by means of a dull steel rake, taking great care to avoid cutting into them; then leave in windrows on the ground to cure. Afterward twist or cut off the remnants of the top and roots, if there be such, and try to sell the crop immediately from the field. If this cannot be done, store in a rather thin layer on a dry floor or loft until they can be disposed of. Greiner, from whose work on "How to Make the Garden Pay" we quote, does not advise the novice to attempt wintering even a part of the crop, as this is a task which involves risk even for the more experienced.



THE WETHERSFIELD.

Onion sets are also harvested when the tops begin to die down, either by lifting out with the onion-set attachment of the Planet, Jr., wheelhoe or by raking in windrows five or six rows together, care being taken of course to get the teeth well under the bulbs. They are left on the ground for two or three days to cure and then taken under shelter and spread out on a dry floor to be cleaned at leisure. This is done by rubbing the sets between the hands to remove remnants of tops and roots and adhering soil or sand and by running through a fanning mill afterward. All bulbs that will not readily pass through a grain sieve with ¾-inch meshes are too large for sets and should be sold or used for pickling onions. Another method of harvesting consists of running a large garden trowel lengthwise under the row, lifting up the bulbs with soil adhering to them and throwing into a small meshed sieve to sift out the sand and soil.

In storing for winter, the bulbs—sometimes mixed with chaff—are piled up four or five inches deep in a dry loft, there allowed to freeze and covered with a foot or so of straw or hay until spring. Or they may be stored in shallow open crates and protected from alternate freezing and thawing.



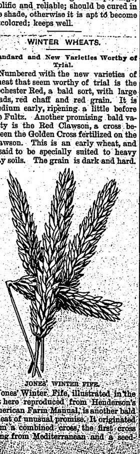
THE WHITE GLOBE.

The Wethersfield is the leading red market variety—large, coarse, reliable and exceedingly prolific; skin deep purplish red; flesh white, flavor strong; unsurpassed as a keeper, according to Greiner, who pronounces the White Globe the most popular white market sort. This is a beautiful silvery white in color and of perfect globe shape; large, prolific and reliable; should be cured in the shade, otherwise it is apt to become discolored; keeps well.

WINTER WHEATS.

Standard and New Varieties Worthy of Trial.

Numbered with the new varieties of wheat that seem worthy of trial is the Rochester Red, a bald sort, with large heads, red chaff and red grain. It is medium early, ripening a little before the Fultz. Another promising bald variety is the Red Clawson, a cross between the Golden Cross fertilized on the Clawson. This is an early wheat, and is said to be specially suited to heavy clay soils. The grain is dark and hard.



JONES' WINTER FIFE.

Jones' Winter Fife, illustrated in the cut here reproduced from Henderson's American Farm Manual, is another bald wheat of unusual promise. It originated from a combined cross, the first cross being from Mediterranean and a seedling, this seedling being a cross between Mediterranean and Fultz, which was crossed with Velvet Chaff. It is a strong grower, covering the ground early in the season, and requiring light seeding on rich soil. The straw is above medium height and strong; heads long and broad and free from beards, with breasts overlapping each other; ripens early; grain of medium size; requires to be left until fully ripe before harvested, and does not shell in the field; transparent, hard and dark. This newcomer, it is thought, is well adapted for the eastern states.

Golden Cross, red and bearded, is a hybrid of the Mediterranean and Clawson. The claims for it are that it is early, a strong grower and prolific yielder of large, plump grain and proof against the Hessian fly. American Bronze, a bald sort, commends itself to localities where the soil is too poor to produce good crops of other wheats. It is of medium height, with thick, strong straw.

Other winter wheats regarded with more or less favor are the Falcaster, Fultz, Martin, Amber and the well known standard winter wheat, Hybrid Mediterranean.

Wintering Bees.

Now we have two general methods of wintering bees—out of doors in chaff or double walled hives, and in the cellar in single walled hives. A writer in The Beekeepers' Review, who does not attempt to compare these methods, says:

I believe that bees can be and are wintered very nearly in perfect health by either method. As to which is the least liable to failure you are surely the best judges, for the method most successful with you is surely the best. Different cellars and the methods of packing upon the summer stands vary so greatly that it is ridiculous to presume to lay down any specific rules for bringing the bees to spring in a prosperous condition.

However, I will describe the methods I would employ to secure perfect hibernation. First, I must see that each colony has thirty pounds or more of good, healthy honey or sugar sirup stored in the combs and well sealed. Then I desire a prolific young queen whose colony has reared a fair amount of young bees during September, which bees should be clustered compactly in a well formed brood nest. Now, if wintered in the cellar they should be placed therein about Nov. 10 to 20. The cellar should be quite dry, and by means of large ventilators or the porosity of the walls the air should be kept pure and sweet and uniformly at a temperature of about 45 degs.

If wintered on their summer stands they should be in chaff packed hives with good roofs that will exclude the rain and snow and admit air to keep the packing dry. Then I must hope for not too severe a winter, but one admitting of several opportunities for flights.

Hay Markets.

Hay markets differ, says The Rural New Yorker. In California timothy is hardly quoted, and hay made of green wheat or barley commands highest figures. In London clover hay is priced at the head and is now bringing twenty-six dollars a ton for best quality. In New York the presence of clover always hurts the price.

Poultry Notes.

Egg foods are principally ground oyster shells, ground bones with gypsum, sand, oxide of iron and cayenne pepper.

Selling pure bred chickens in the fall is becoming popular among fanciers.

One bushel of corn and oats ground together and fed to poultry will produce fifteen pounds of flesh. How many pounds of pork would the same quantity of food produce?

During cold rainstorms and the mornings after, season the mixed food, with a free sprinkling of red pepper; a little in the drinking water will also be beneficial.

Save all the earliest and finest pullets; feed them up well with milk and scraps or a good variety of rich food if you want them to lay a bountiful supply of eggs this winter.

Buy now and let your fowls become acquainted with their new friends and accustomed to their new quarters before the breeding season arrives.—American Poultry Yard.

Seed Corn.

Personally we begin to doubt whether after all it is best to select seed corn early in the fall by picking the ears that ripen earliest. Close observation leads us to conclude that in very many instances prematurely ripened ears are not healthy. Should any accident befall the stalk after the ear has filled the latter will ripen early. Smut, for instance, if injurious to the leaves and stalks, causes this early ripening, and certainly we should not select seed corn that may possibly spread the smut. Many old experienced farmers hold that the time to select seed corn is when the crop is being husked. At this time one is able to compare the ears with many others and so select the best. We fancy this plan is correct, says the editor of The Farmers' Review.

There is one point in saving seed corn we want to see counted on more than it is—that is, study the stalk well when you select the ear. Select good fair ears from strong rampant growing stalks. The ear will not indicate the kind of stalk you are to have next year. But if you want strong growing corn select your seed from that kind of stalks. The principle is the same as in breeding animals. A smart farmer should breed his corn and other grains in the same way. It is a good plan to select the seed wheat, oats, barley or rye from that part of the field which presents a strong growth, and not from the heap of thrashed grain promiscuously, says the agricultural editor of The Inter Ocean.

The Ohio state agricultural experiment station has been removed from Columbus to Wooster. All communications designed for this station should hereafter be addressed to the latter place. Charles E. Thorne is the director.

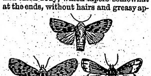
CUTWORMS.

General Descriptions by Which Cutworms May Be Distinguished.

The term cutworm is very loosely applied, being often applied to the larvæ of the June bug, which cuts grass roots; to wireworms, the larvæ of the snapping beetles and even to the borers that cut channels in woody plants.

The term cutworm, according to Entomologist Harvey, of the Maine station, is principally confined by entomologists to larvæ of the owlet moths, that have the habit of hiding just under the surface of the ground during the day and feeding upon the roots, stems or leaves of plants by night. When the larvæ climb high and feed upon the foliage of tall trees or plants they are called climbing cutworms. The cutworms may be known by their descriptions furnished with cuts by Entomologist Harvey in a recent bulletin.

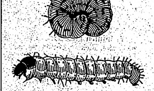
The moths known as dart or owlet moths are triangular in shape when the wings are closed, and usually fly at night and often enter rooms where there is a light to attract them. The worms when full grown measure from one to two inches in length, have sixteen legs and thick body, which tapers somewhat at the ends, without hairs and greasy appearance; brown, gray or greenish, with indistinct oblique markings. The head long, shining red or brown; head and anal segments armed above with a horny plate, darker than the remainder of the body. On each segment are six or eight dark colored lumps, each bearing a hair. (See second cut.) When disturbed the worms curl themselves into a ring, as shown in Fig. 1 in the second cut. There are between 300 and 400 American species related to the cutworms.



DART OR OWLET MOTHS.

Preventive remedies of these pests consist in application of chemicals to the soil; protecting the plants so the worms cannot reach them with tin or paper tubes or frames; thick planting, so as to have a good stand after the worms have fully fed, and dusting the foliage with hellebore, ashes or slaked lime to make it unpalatable to the worms.

Late fall plowing and early spring plowing and late seeding are destructive remedies suggested. Spraying the foliage with london purple or paris green will kill species that attack the foliage. Shaking the trees or vines early in the morning and destroying the worms that fall, has been recommended for climbing cutworms. A preventive remedy strongly recommended by Lintner is soaking the seed in copperas water—one pound to the bushel of seed—allowing it to remain twelve hours and then rolling it in plaster. Killing the worms before the crop is up is another plan. Professor Cook poisoned clover and then forked it from a wagon in small bundles at intervals through the field. Professor Riley recommends that the food will keep fresh longer if tied in balls or loose masses. Another person put poisoned cabbage and turnip leaves in rows fifteen to twenty feet apart through the field. The food can be poisoned with paris green or london purple, preferably in suspension in water, though some have mixed it with plaster or flour.



CUTWORMS.

A Mexican Bat in a Birdcage.

In a little out of the way alley not far from Stuyvesant square there is a small, dingy barroom. It is the favorite drinking place of a dozen or more old men, who are cronies and have met and played chess there for many years. The aged proprietor of the place has filled the room with curiosities—strange stuffed birds, autographs of old New Yorkers, theater tickets of a quarter of a century ago, a few old fashioned collars, etc. The old gentleman is facetious occasionally. He has been chuckling over his latest joke for a week or two.

Hanging from the ceiling directly over the bar is a bamboo birdcage. The four sides of the cage are covered with cloth curtains. On one of these curtains is printed this inscription, "A Mexican Bat." Of course every customer wants to see the animal, but on lifting the curtain one sees nothing but a brick suspended from the top of the cage by a string. The experiment generally costs the curious person at least the price of five flagons of ale.—New York Tribune.

A Scheme That Works.

When you go into the Marble Collegiate church, at Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, you will find in the book rack of each pew a card of the size of a fashionable envelope. It is an "acquaintance card," bearing the pastor's name and church address on one side, with a nice little square in the upper right hand corner in which is printed, "If mailed, two cent stamp here." On the other side is printed: "In order that the pastors may have the opportunity of seeking personal acquaintance and extending to you the courtesies of the church, please write your name and address below, drop the card in the pastor's mail box, hand to an usher or return by mail. Signed, David James Burrell, D. D., pastor; Rev. Palmer S. Hulbert, Rev. Alfred E. Myers, assistant pastors." It is a sort of a drop-a-card-in-a-slot-and-receive-a-pastoral-call scheme, and they say it works well.—New York Times.

A Very Close Shave.

"I believe I got into the closest place during the civil war that a man ever got out of alive," said E. N. Harper, the Mulhatton of Michigan, now stopping at the Laclede. "I had been detailed to obtain information regarding the strength of a detachment of Confederate troops stationed on the Tennessee river, near Decatur, Ala. I got the information, and was working my way back to camp when I was discovered and pursued by a scouting party. I had concealed a skiff in the brush on the banks of the river, but a sudden rise had swept it away, and there was nothing to do but surrender or swim the swollen stream. I plunged in, but the current was stronger than I had anticipated, and by the time I reached midstream my strength was about exhausted. I managed to get hold of the end of a floating log and drifted down stream, while the Johnnies made the water around me boil with their bullets.

"I soon drifted out of range and crawled up on the log, only to discover that it was already occupied by a big water moccasin, who was inclined to dispute possession. I had no weapon but a water soaked pistol. If I staid on the log I would get bit; if I got off I would be drowned. While debating what I should do the log drifted within range of the Union pickets, and they appeared to think I had been raised up by a special providence as a practice target. The first volley killed the moccasin, and before they could reload I made them understand that I was not trying to pull any feathers out of the tail of the American eagle. Since my escape from that position of fourfold peril I have been something of a fatalist."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Strange stories are frequently told of the doings of electricity, and there is no doubt that of all the forces of nature this is the most capable of eccentric manifestation.

The pyrometer measures heat in degrees and fractions, and will give accurate figures even though the heat runs up to the unthinkable intensity of 7,000 degs.

We learn from a doctor that stammering is almost unknown among savages. Is this infirmity, then, one of the penalties we pay for civilization?

North Dakota went to smash with the rest of the democratic states, and the only thing the republicans saved out of the wreck was a congressman, the secretary of state and the legislature.

ON the face of the returns as reported on Wednesday, Feig was 141 ahead of Boen for congressman in this district. It will be a close run between them and Feig may yet be found to be right in it.

THE victory of the fusionists in Kansas knocks out prohibition in that state. That is, Governor-elect Lewellyn is not in favor of enforcing the law, and "joints" will run wide open and booze will soon be flowing free.

WHEN the JOURNAL went to press last week Commissioner Rhinehart was ahead for commissioner in his district, but the people's party candidate, Robert Anderson, pulled ahead on the home stretch and came in under the wire just 11 votes ahead of Mr. Rhinehart. The board will be composed of Messrs. Oppegaard, Lindem, Kirsch, DeMers and Anderson.

IT is a matter for republican congratulation that in the terrible landslide to the democracy throughout the country, Minnesota stands true to the republican party. Not only have the republicans elected the governor and state officers, but the entire nine republican electors. It was not expected by even the most sanguine republicans that the whole nine would be elected because of the fusion deal on four of them. But the fusion availed the democrats nothing, and only disgusted many of the old dyed-in-the-wool democrats who want to stand on their own platform, whether it goes down or not. Besides the state and national ticket, a republican legislature has been elected, which means the return of C. K. Davis to the senate. Minnesota is all right, and the republicans are gaining ground in the state.

THE democratic majority in congress has been reduced about forty-six, but the senate will be democratic. The democrats have both branches of the national legislature, and will have ample opportunity to make a record. The people want a change, now let's have it. The democrats in their platform declare protection to be a fraud; so of course they will give us free trade. Throw the gates wide open, let in the manufactures of foreign countries in competition with our own. If our manufacturers cannot compete with old world manufacturers, let them close up shop or reduce the wages of their employes to the level of the European laborer. If the employes don't like this, let them go west—or go to thunder. We don't care anything about their welfare. We want free trade, so that we can get rid of this iniquitous tariff that is robbing the people of this country out of their hard-earned coin. The people have demanded it, and their demands must be heeded.

Another promise the democrats must keep is to repeal the 10 per cent tax on state banks, and allow every state bank in the country to issue money at its own sweet will. This will give us more currency and then we'll be able to pay our debts and have money left.

The days will drag slowly on till the democrats gain control of the government and give us the legislation necessary to make better times for everybody and the nation more prosperous.

Two years ago Owen, the alliance candidate for governor of Minnesota, received 58,513 votes. This year Donnelly, the people's party candidate for the same office, will scarcely receive 38,000, a falling off of over 20,000 votes. At this rate of decrease, the people's party will have dwindled to a very small fraction in this state by next election.

AT a Nelson ratification meeting last Saturday evening in Alexandria, Mr. Nelson told how he had been waited on by a committee who said they represented 15,000 votes, and asked him to sign certain papers to secure their support. His answer was:

"I go in without having made any promises to any combine, corporation or persons, and shall endeavor to do right, because it is right, and I shall endeavor to give an administration of the people, for the people and by the people."

PETITIONS are being circulated throughout the country with a view to securing better roads. The establishment of a road department, an institute of road engineering, and a permanent road exhibit in the city of Washington, and a comprehensive exhibit of road construction and maintenance at the World's Columbian Exposition would accomplish much in the way of practical results. Our roads and highways have been left almost entirely to township and county supervision and maintenance, and it is high time the United States should render some assistance in this line as well as upon the waterways of the country, upon which millions of dollars have been expended.

THERE is one section in the Australian law which does not seem to be just. Paragraph eight of section eight reads as follows:

Eighth. The mere intention to acquire a new residence without the fact of removal, shall avail nothing, neither shall the fact of removal without the intention. And no person employed temporarily in the construction or repair of any railroad, canal, municipal or other work of public nature, shall acquire a residence in any election precinct into which he came for that purpose so as to entitle him to vote therein; but this provision shall not be held to extend to station agents and section men who permanently reside in such election district. In any question that may arise as to the right of any person in the employment of any railroad corporation or employed upon public work, as aforesaid, to be registered or to vote in any election precinct, it must first satisfactorily appear to all the judges of such election that the said party is an actual bona fide resident of said election district and not there for temporary purposes merely, and the mere affidavit of such person shall not be received as conclusive as to any fact necessary to entitle him to vote

Now the intent of the law is all right. It prevents gangs of men from being brought into a voting precinct simply for the purpose of voting, but on the other hand it disfranchises a lot of men who are entitled to vote. For instance, men working on a railroad or other public work, and having no home except where they are working cannot vote at all under the Australian law. It makes no difference whether they have lived in a place long enough to comply with the law in regard to establishing a residence, they cannot vote because they are working on a public work and came into the precinct for that purpose.

The JOURNAL would be in favor of a property qualification in municipal elections, but so long as we have universal suffrage, every citizen should have a vote at least on national and state affairs. Because a person has the misfortune to be employed temporarily on a public work, he should not be disbarred from voting somewhere. The laborer who works on a railroad or a canal or a public work of any kind has as much right to vote as the laborer who works in the mines or the mills.

IN an interview in the Minneapolis Tribune S. M. Owen, the favorite populist of Minnesota, intimates that the populists need expect nothing from the domocrats for the reason that the democratic party is dominated by the money power, and he also says that if the republican party will shake off the shackles which have hitherto bound it, it can bring all the populists under its banner. He thinks the people's party in Minnesota cannot be resurrected, and they must either form a new party or go in with the rank and file of the republican party. In other words he admits that the principles of the republican party are right, but the leaders have failed to carry out those principles. Read what he says:

"The situation at this time is analogous to the political conditions from 1852 to 1860. When the two old parties, Whig and Democratic, were dominated by the power of slavery, the same as the present old parties both of them, are dominated by corporate power and monopoly. Neither has the power to shake itself free from this control, and the democratic party has by a temporary landslide returned to power, will be less inclined to attempt to do so than ever before. The republican party as at present controlled, will not be inclined to do so, but I can foresee that the element which we know exists among the rank and file of the republicans, may shape itself to bring about a readjustment of its party on such lines as may find the millions of the country who see these things but do not act, rushing into party organization with them."

"Do you mean that the republican party may become the so-called people's party, or the latter be abandoned?"

"Such a readjustment might still be called the republican party. The name matters very little, There may be no more people's party by name and the leaders of the present movement may be no more than very weak John Brown's in the economic reform to come. In that view the republican party would not revolutionize itself."

"Why do you expect nothing from the democratic party?"

"Because it is dominated by the power that the republican party has been. Look at the great coal combine, the Boston and Maine. There is Depew in it side by side with Whitney, who has engineered Cleveland's election. Unfortunately the democratic party believes that all besetting woes spring from the protective tariff—which they do not. They spring from the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few."

THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT.

Thirteen Towns: Our first experience with the Australian ballot was held on Tuesday, and if the proper facilities had been provided it would have proved a success in the opinion of every voter. As it was, the judges did not provide the number of booths required by law, and consequently there was great delay, and many even went away without voting.

McIntosh News: About the hardest worked people in our village were the clerks of the last election. Although good accountants, the Australian ballot system was entirely new to them, and it took thirty-six hours of solid work to canvass. Owing to the insufficiency of voting booths yesterday forenoon quite a number of farmers went home without voting.

St. Vincent New Era: Counting the votes under the new election law was a long and tedious job, but all are satisfied with the Australian system.

Hallock News: The result of the new election law as shown when the votes were counted on Tuesday last seem to indicate that a great many legally qualified voters do not know what they are really voting for nor what they wish to vote. A great many of the ballots were marked with an x here and there, scattered promiscuously along the margin. Some voted for fifteen instead of nine presidential electors, some only one, while others did not vote either for electors or anyone else, but simply folded the ballot and handed it in no doubt under the impression that they had voted for a whole newspaper full of candidates and had therefore fully executed their duty to the country. The Australian ballot system is, however, conceded to be a good one and has found favor with the people as being one of strict honesty, where intelligence is necessary in order to have the vote count. A voter in Badger Creek is reported to have showed his intelligence in a remarkable manner. He took his ticket, went into the voting booth and tore out the names of all he did not wish to vote for and the balance he brought out in his hand and wanted to deposit in the ballot box.

Marshall County Leader: The new election law did not work quite so smoothly in Stephen as it was expected to, as voters were not so well informed as to the manner of voting as they should have been. It is estimated that at least 25 or 30 voters did not cast their ballots. A few ballots were put in the box without any marks while others had marks after nearly every name; it is presumed that these voters were trying to scratch the names off so as not to vote for them, meaning only to vote for the ones whose names were not cancelled. They accomplished one purpose, their votes were not counted for—anyone.

'Twas Due to His Canvass.

Grand Forks News (Dem.): The election of Knute Nelson to the governorship of Minnesota against the combined influence of the monopolies which were for Lawler, absolves him from all obligation to the power that has ruled the state. His magnificent canvass alone is responsible for the result, and he is answerable only to the people.

That Row on the Train.

McIntosh News: A disgraceful row occurred on the train Saturday last, between this place and Erskine. It seems that some one became engaged in an altercation with one of the train men, which soon came to blows. By the time the train reached Erskine sides were taken and a free-for-all fight took place in which rifles were quite conspicuous. The departure of the train probably averted a tragedy.

BREAKS OUT AGAIN

PEACE AND QUIET AT HOMESTEAD BROKEN BY RIOT.

Non-Union Negroes on One Side and Strikers on the Other Have a Clash. Revolvers and Knives Used at Close Quarters, but No One Is Killed.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 14.—The period of comparative quiet which has prevailed in Homestead since the militia left, died out Sunday and the pent up feelings of the strikers broke out afresh in a riot in which at least fifty shots were fired, at which no one was killed although a score were hit by flying bullets. A party of colored non-union men were on their way to their boarding house about 4:45 p. m., when a man, supposed to be a striker, attacked two of the negroes. Charles Carroll and Fred Lewis were knocked down. This was a signal for a large crowd to gather at the scene of the trouble. Lewis' friends came to his rescue and a terrible riot took place between the colored men on one side and the crowd, supposed to be all strikers, on the other. The two sides fought desperately and flashed revolvers and slashed each other with knives at close quarters for several minutes, when the negroes made a dash through the crowd for their boarding house. They were followed by the howling, bloodthirsty crowd, which by this time numbered at least 2,000, including many women and children. The crowd fired and threw stones at the fleeing negroes and they in turn returned the fire on the crowd, and how so many escaped instant death is a miracle. At least two dozen people were injured by flying missles, but as far as can be learned none were killed. The seven negroes and a number of strikers have been arrested. The greatest excitement prevails here and more deputies have been asked for.

STILL AT FEVER HEAT.

Homestead Yet Excited Over the Events of Sunday.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 15.—The excitement attendant upon the scenes in Homestead Sunday afternoon is still at fever heat. In order to avoid the possibility of a conflict between the crowd and the negroes the hearings were heard at the jail. All the prisoners were held to court on a charge of riot. Bail in $500 was furnished for two of the white rioters, McAllister and Barco, and they were released. The prisoners were taken to Pittsburg under heavy guard.

STRIKE IS OFF.

New Orleans Workingmen and Employers Make an Agreement.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 11.—At 2 a. m. the strike was declared off. It is agreed:

First—That the laborers who went out on strike on Oct. 23, 1892, shall be taken back to their employment as soon as they offer their services, in so far as it does not conflict with contracts already made.

Second—Wages and hours to be arbitrated.

Third—It is further agreed that the merchants, boss draymen and other employers, obligate themselves not to make any unjust discrimination against union men, but always give their applications for employment fairest consideration; the merchants and other employers reserving to themselves the right to deal directly with their men.

The parties to this agreement declare that they will use their best endeavors to adjust any differences which may result or may have resulted, or may result from any strike made from sympathy with the strike herein above referred to in accordance with the above terms.

FOUR CREMATED.

Frightful Railroad Wreck Occurs Near Ottumwa.

OTTUMWA, Ia., Nov. 10.—A fearful catastrophe occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road at Highland Center, a small station on that road north of this city. A fast freight crashed into the caboose of a local freight standing on the track, telescoping the caboose and four cars.

The caboose caught fire and the scene which followed was heartrending. Four people were burned alive and a number of others had narrow escapes. The caboose was split in two by a car of grain, wedging in four people on the right side.

A most pitiful sight was Miss Lizzie Butler, of this city, who got her head out of the window and piteously pleaded with those about to save her. Her body was pinioned by a freight car and it was impossible to extricate her.

Mrs. Jones, also of this city, tried to escape through the window, but being an unusually large woman, she could not get through.

The other victims are an unknown woman and an unknown man. The latter is thought to be a butcher at Oskaloosa.

The injured are: Mrs. Clyde Millisack, Mrs. Pickett, of this city, and Miss Lizzie Corry. These were badly burned, but not seriously.

CUT HIS THROAT.

At the Marriage Reception of Their Sister Two Brothers Have a Fatal Quarrel.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 14.—A bloody murder occurred at 118 Swiss street Sunday. Patrick Frank Murphy cut the throat of his brother, W. J. Murphy, a conductor on the Toledo division of the Lake Shore railroad. Saturday a sister of the two brothers was married and Sunday a reception was given in honor of the occasion. The murderer, who is a dissolute character, remained in his room and his brother said he would see what was the matter with him. Soon after he entered the room a struggle ensued in which Patrick cut the throat of his brother from ear to ear. The murderer gave himself up to the police. The murdered man leaves a widow and two children.

NATIONAL SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Government Sustained in an Election in the Northwest Territories.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 14.—The bye election in the Wallace constituency of the Nortwest Territories Saturday resulted in favor of ex-Premier Haultains' candidate and will restore to him control of the legislative assembly and the leadership of the executive. The election was fought out on the separate school question, Haultains promising that if returned to power he would establish a system of national schools. Haultains now has a majority of two in the house. Before election the two parties were a tie and a deadlock existed.

Estee Gets a Job.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The president has appointed W. R. Estee, of Minnesota, consul at Hamburg, Germany, in place of Charles F. Johnson, of Ohio, resigned. Consul Johnson's resignation, it is understood, was occasioned by ill-health and was not in any way connected with the cholera outbreak in regard to which his official conduct received the approval of the department. Mr. Estee is a native of Indiana. He held till recently the position of consul at Kingston, Jamaica, to which Mr. Dane, the state department's stenographer, was lately appointed. The salary of the Kingston consulate is $3,000, of the Hamburg consulate $2,500.

A BIG MAJORITY.

CLEVELAND'S VOTE IN THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE AT LEAST 267.

In Addition to the Solid South the Ex-President Gets the Votes of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin—Ohio Very Close and Still Claimed by Both—Weaver Carries Kansas, Colorado, North Dakota, Idaho and Nevada.

The general election, Tuesday, Nov. 8, resulted in a sweeping victory for Cleveland and Stevenson, Democratic candidates for president and vice president. The number of Democrats entitled to seats in next electoral college is greater than any party has had since the first election of General Grant. In addition to the Solid South the ex-president gets the votes of New York, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, New Jersey, Connecticut and six out of the fourteen from Michigan. Democrats are also claiming Ohio, which, from late reports, shows large Democratic gains. Republicans admit the vote is very close, but claim a small plurality for Harrison.

The People's party vote in many states fell below expectations. However, Weaver claims the states of Colorado, Kansas, Nevada, Idaho and North Dakota and will have twenty-three votes in the electoral college.

MINNESOTA.

Republican state ticket elected, except possibly the supreme court justices. Nelson, Republican candidate for governor, will have a plurality close to 14,000. Harrison, for president, ran ahead of the state Republican ticket, and Republican electors were chosen. Republican congressmen were elected in the First, Second, Fourth and Fifth districts. O. M. Hall, Democrat, was re-elected in the Third district. The Sixth district is claimed for the Democratic candidate, and in the Seventh district Moen, People's party candidate for congress, claims to be elected. The official count must be awaited to decide who goes to congress from the Sixth and Seventh districts. In the state legislature the Republicans will have a majority on joint ballot, and it is predicted that C. K. Davis will be re-elected United States senator.

IOWA.

Returns indicate a plurality for Harrison of 22,000. The state ticket is elected by a smaller majority. Republicans elect congressmen in ten of the eleven districts, Walter I. Hayes, of the Second district, being the only Democrat elected. The People's party vote is about 35,000 and the Prohibition vote about 8,000.

ILLINOIS.

Cleveland has a majority in Illinois of between 25,000 and 30,000. The state Democratic ticket is elected by a slightly smaller plurality. The Democrats also have a majority in the legislature on joint ballot, and will elect a United Stater senator. They have also elected at least twelve congressmen.

WYOMING.

Reports from all counties in Wyoming except Fremont give the state to Weaver by a majority of 500. Fusionists have 15 majority on joint ballot in the legislature. Coffin, Democrat, is elected to congress.

WASHINGTON.

Republican electors will have a plurality close to 4,100. Entire Republican state ticket elected, also two Republican congressmen, all the state is entitled to. Both branches of the state legislature are controlled by Republicans.

MICHIGAN.

Republicans elected their state ticket by about 7,000 plurality. Eight Republican and six Democratic electors were chosen. The legislature very close, Populists probably holding the balance of power.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Shortridge, Fusionist candidate for governor, is elected by between 1,200 and 1,500. Both parties claim the legislature. Johnson, Republican for congress, is probably re-elected.

MONTANA.

Republican electors were chosen. The Democrats have a majority of the legislature on joint ballot, insuring the election of a Democrat to succeed Senator Sanders.

WISCONSIN.

Corrected returns give Cleveland and Peck (governor) about 9,000 plurality. The legislature is largely Democratic, insuring a Democratic senator in place of Sawyer.

NEBRASKA.

Republicans elect the entire state ticket by about 8,000. Harrison electors were chosen by about 3,000. Republicans also have the legislature on joint ballot.

CALIFORNIA.

Republican electors will have a plurality close to 4,800. In the state legislature, the Democrats will have a strong majority on joint ballot.

OREGON.

Harrison electors chosen by about 4,000 plurality except as to Pierce, Fusionist, who ran ahead of the balance of the ticket.

OHIO.

Republican electors chosen, except one Democrat. The majority for the Republicans is so small that the Democratic state central committee declares that the official count must be waited for before placing the state in the Republican column.

NEW JERSEY.

Democrats elected their state and national tickets. Republicans have two and possibly three congressmen.

KANSAS.

People's party electors victorious, also their entire state ticket and a majority of their legislative candidates.

MISSOURI.

Democratic electors victorious. The state's delegation in congress will be 13 Democrats, 2 Republicans.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Harrison's plurality will be between 3,000 and 4,000. The Republican state ticket is also elected.

NEW YORK.

Democrats have New York. Cleveland electors were chosen by nearly 45,000 plurality.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Rebublicans have the electors but the Democrats elected Russell governor by about 2,000.

NEVADA.

The silver party carried everything in Nevada. Weaver gets the electors by about 500.

INDIANA.

Democratic electors will have a plurality of 8,500.

THE SOLID SOUTH.

In all the Southern states Cleveland electors were chosen by increased majorities.

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

Status of the Different Parties in That Body Not Yet Definitely Known.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—More than forty-eight hours after the polls closed it is still impossible to give the status of the several parties in the Fifty-third congress officially. The developments of the day tend to confirm the statement made originally in the United Press dispatches that the balance of power in the next senate will be held by the third party, although by a narrow margin.

The Democrats will gain senators in New York, Wisconsin, Wyoming and California, giving them 43. Republicans will return a successor to Senator Paddock from Nebraska and also Senator Perkins from Kansas, although the legislature in this state is still claimed by the Farmers' Alliance. The legislatures of Minnesota and Michigan have Republican majorities. The Republican strength in the senate is thus reduced to 42, leaving to Senators Peffer, Kyle and Stewart (who will succeed himself from Nevada), the power to control the senate with alliance with either party. The chances are they will operate with the Democrats in this matter. Up to midnight the result in congressional districts in New Hampshire, Ohio, Michigan, Kansas and California was unsettled, the figures not having been fully reported. The probable complexion of the house, however, will be 221 Democrats, 126 Republicans and 9 Populists.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

Democrats Are Quite Likely to Be in Control After March 4, Next.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Democratic party is quite likely to be in control of the United States senate after March 4, next. On that date 25 senate seats become vacant. The men who will succeed to these vacancies are almost sure of being divided among the political parties so as to give the Republicans 9, Democrats 13, Peoples's party 3.

The political make-up of the next senate will be as shown in the table printed below:

	R.	D.		R.	D.
Alabama	..	2	Nevada	1	..
Arkansas	..	2	New Hampshire	2	..
California	1	1	New Jersey	..	2
Colorado	2	..	New York	..	2
Connecticut	2	..	North Carolina	..	2
Delaware	1	1	North Dakota	2	..
Florida	..	2	Ohio	1	1
Georgia	..	2	Oregon	2	..
Idaho	2	..	Pennsylvania	2	..
Illinois	1	1	Rhode Island	2	..
Indiana	..	2	South Carolina	..	2
Iowa	2	..	South Dakota	1	..
Kentucky	..	2	Tennessee	..	2
Louisiana	..	2	Texas	..	2

Minnesota	2	..	Wisconsin	..	2
Mississippi	..	2	Wyoming	1	1
Missouri	..	2
Montana	1	1	Total	39	44
Nebraska	1	..

The Populists will have two senators from Kansas and one each from Nebraska, Nevada and South Dakota.

Agree to Fight.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A cable dispatch has been received in this city which states that Hall has agreed to fight Fitzsimmons at the Crescent Athletic club in New Orleans for the $45,000 purse offered by that organization. The dispatch added that Charley Mitchell was willing to fight for the $50,000 offered by the New Orleans club and that the men would sign articles just as soon as they reached them.

CLEVELAND WILL SPEAK.

A Notable Gathering of Democrats Will Attend a New York Banquet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—President-elect Cleveland is to be the guest of honor at a banquet by the Reform club at the Madison Square Garden assembly rooms Saturday evening, Dec. 8. Though the plans are crude, it seems safe to prophesy that never has a more distinguished body of Democrats gathered in this or any other city than will assemble about the board three weeks hence. Though the speakers have not all been decided upon, it is said that beside the president-elect and the vice president-elect, Governor Russell of Massachusetts, ex-Governor Campbell of Ohio, Speaker Crisp of the house of representatives, Senator J. G. Carlisle of Kentucky, Senator D. B. Hill, Senator Arthur P. Gorman, and Governor Boies of Iowa, will be asked to make addresses.

PREPARING FOR INAUGURATION.

Democratic Clubs Already Getting Ready for a Big Demonstration.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Already preparations are under way for the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland on March 4 next. It is the intention of Democratic organizations in the large cities to make it more notable than any similar event that has preceded it. Tammany Hall, of New York, the Harrity club, of Philadelphia, Iroquois club, of Chicago, and other similar organizations have already sent representatives to Washington to secure accommodations for their members who will be present and participate in the event. The estimates are early fixing the number of marchers in the procession to celebrate the return of the Democratic party to power at 50,000.

WHITNEY AND CABLE.

A Chicago Paper Says They Will Have State and Navy Portfolios Respectively.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—A local paper has the following: "William C. Whitney, of New York, will be premier of President Cleveland's second administration. Benjamin T. Cable, of Illinois, will be tendered the navy portfolio. The foregoing statements are made on the highest authority and come directly from the president-elect to a gentleman now in Chicago and high in the party's councils.

CABINET MAKING.

Mr. Cleveland and the Correspondents Are in the Business.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12—It is stated that President-elect Cleveland has already begun to think about his cabinet. All forecasts so far printed have made Mr. Cleveland laugh. A friend of Mr. Whitney said that the latter would not be minister to England.

Mr. Cleveland had among his callers Mr. Patrick A. Collins, of Boston, who saw Mr. Cleveland on Thursday also. This is regarded by many as indicating that General Collins is in the ranks of cabinet possibilities, and close up to where the band is.

Don M. Dickinson is taking a rest after his campaigning. Mr. Dickinson said that he was not a candidate for any office in the gift of a president, at home or abroad.

"Some people may assert," said he, "that it is in bad taste to decline a thing before it has been tendered, but Mr. Cleveland understands me perfectly on that point. I will take nothing. My ambitions lie entirely in my profession."

Since the announcement of the candidacy of Edward Murphy, Jr., for the senate politicians have come to accept his election as a matter of course.

W. Bourke Cockran said that he was not a candidate, that he was satisfied with his present position, and that Mr. Murphy would be the senator if he wanted to be.

There is an increasing interest in the future relations of Mr. Clebeland and Senator Hill. Most of the latter's friends when questioned say they know nothing whatever about it.

Democratic headquarters are still nominally open. The campaign committee will conclude all business next week. Colonel Tracey, the head of the press bureau, and Sergeant-at-Arms Oliver are still in charge of the ground floor.

More details of the Democratic "still hunt" in Ohio are narrated here by a morning paper. The inspiration came to the Democrats in Speaker Crisp's room in the Hoffman house. James Neal, of Ohio, entered, it is said, and spoke of the fact that the Republicans had deserted the state, feeling that it was safe, and this would be a good time to make an effort to carry it. The question was laid before Chairman Harrity and Campaign Chairman Dickinson. Harrity, it is stated, jumped at the chance and induced Senator Brice to make the effort, furnishing the funds for necessary expenses.

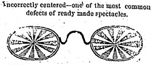
ARTIFICIAL EYES INSERTED WITHOUT PAIN.

If you have lost an eye by accident or disease be sure you call on me and I will insert an artificial eye, which will move and look like the natural eye and improve your looks.

Incorrectly centered—one of the most common defects of ready made spectacles.



SIGHT IS PRICELESS.

Do not persist in abusing it by ill-fitting glasses, sold by incompetent dealers and quacks, but consult a qualified optician, and have your eyes scientifically tested, and frames properly fitted to your face.

There is more injury done than people are aware of by improperly fitted glasses. Too strong, too weak, too narrow, too wide, too big, too little, poor glass, poorly made, ignorantly made, are a few of the most glaring faults. Daily does the result of this ignorance upon the part of the incompetent dealers in spectacles come before me in distressing cases of permanently impaired vision.

I am a graduate of leading Opthalmic schools and having had fifteen years practical experience in the adjustment of glasses, I can give you better satisfaction than those who make the adjustment of glasses an adjunct to their profession.

TARIFF PRIZE ESSAY.

A NOTABLE PAPER BY HERBERT W. DAMON, OF OHIO.

The American Tariff System Strongly Set Forth by a College Student—Logical Reasoning in Favor of the McKinley Law—Free Trade Dissected.

The prize of $150 offered by the American Protective Tariff league for the best essay on the tariff by a college senior was won by Mr. Herbert W. Damon. His argument makes a particularly strong paper, as will be seen by the following copious extracts:

Every problem of public finance involves a problem of private finance. The public revenues can be gathered only from the accretions of individual toil. It behooves every government, therefore, so to distribute the burdens of taxation that they shall rest as equitably and lightly as possible on its individual citizens.

The free trader insists that international trade is mutually profitable, even though the advantages and disadvantages be only relative. If one country possesses superior facilities over another in every branch of industry there will still be a gain in commerce if the countries produce those things in which they are, respectively, at the greatest advantage and the least disadvantage. Trade unrestricted would doubtless lead to this result, but the protectionist can see no resultant gain to the country possessing superior facilities in all directions.

Apply this doctrine to the United States. We have a territory covering all the most desirable part of a temperate zone, and extending southward into the subtropical regions. We need ask little in agriculture from any part of the earth except the strictly tropical countries. We have as rich mines of all the most important metals as exist. As to our people, not only is the original Yankee stock possessed of rare native skill in every kind of industry, but we have drawn upon all the nations of Christendom for the peculiar talent that each one possesses. There is no reason why one cannot produce nearly all that we use, aside from tropical growths, with as little labor as any competitor. Yet it is true, nevertheless, that our superiority over the nations of Europe in agriculture is far greater than in any other line of industry. In so far, then, as the principle of Professor Cairnes, one of the ablest of free trade writers, operated, we should all become tillers of the soil. Would this be to the highest interest of America?

The first consideration that leads me to return a negative answer is this: He whose labor is most fruitful can afford to give most in return for what he buys. If the American manufacturer or miner can produce more in a given time than his European competitor, then he can give more in exchange for his food and raw materials.

The only escape from this conclusion must be found in the lower standard of living prevalent abroad. If the consumption of the foreigner relative to his production is less than in the case of the American, then our farmer might look for better terms abroad. Such might be the case if the European manufacturer were forced to it. Rather than turn to agriculture he would reduce his profits till he was on an equal footing with the neighboring farmer. But to expect him to do so as long as he has a monopoly of the American market is to ascribe to him motives that are not ordinarily the springs of commercial activity.

At the same time the knowledge of what he will do when driven to it serves as a potential check upon American enterprise. Herein seems to lie the fundamental error of the free trader. He assumes that the American, exchanging his crops for European manufactures, will retain all the advantages incident to the fertility of American soil. He forgets that the manufacturer is as much of a monopolist in his way as the farmer in his, and will insist on sharing all the special facilities of the latter.

Again, it is urged that to restrict importation of foreign goods is to limit to the same extent our export trade. This postulate derives its force from a double assumption: 1. That the extent of its foreign trade is an infallible index of the degree of prosperity of a country. 2. That exports and imports must exactly balance.

The first premise is the fundamental point at issue. The protectionist must believe that a protective tariff reduces the amount of foreign trade. He claims that a home market is created for our farm products, so that there is much less to send abroad. But is this detrimental to American interests? Is the foreign market superior to the home market? Can and will the foreign manufacturer pay more in commodities for his provisions than the home producer? The foreign market is at best an uncertain factor. Each country endeavors, so far as possible, to supply its own needs. When the home supply is insufficient the outside world is called upon to make good the deficit. Foreign demand is therefore approximately constant. We may get rid of a small part of our crops abroad, but to throw the whole or any large part upon the world market would result in prices ruinous to the American and European farmer alike.

This gives us a basis for the discussion of the second problem. If the foreign demand is practically fixed, then our export trade will not be greatly affected by restricting importation. The barter principle of the free traders is doubtless the ultimate basis of trade, but it is such a faraway, shadowy ultimate that we can drive a good many profitable cash bargains before we reach it. That it is not directly applicable is abundantly demonstrated by facts.

Take our trade with single countries first. In round numbers we exported to England in 1890 goods to the value of $386,000,000, while our imports from the same country amounted to but $157,000,000. This gives a ratio of 2.4 to 1 in favor of our export trade. Our English trade has maintained about this relation for years. To Belgium we sent goods valued at $36,000,000, and received in return $9,000,000 worth. A hard bargain that for the United States! For Brazil the figures are: Exports, $12,000,000; and imports, $59,000,000, or five times as large importation as exportation.

Only three times in the last nineteen years have our total imports exceeded our total exports. But surely this is a great calamity. What possible good can come to us from exporting a large amount more than we receive in return? If we apply to the individual the argument implied in this question we must regard the spendthrift as most enviable. He is continually getting back all or more than he gives. The trouble with the free trade argument is that they assume that because a permanent excess of imports is not desirable therefore a temporary excess is unfortunate. England annually imports much more than she exports, and contrary to free trade theories this condition has every mark of permanence. But who supposes that England could exact this annual tribute from other countries if she had not first got them in debt to her? We want a favorable balance of trade, not as a mark of servitude, but as an evidence of thrift.

The profits of the farmers as a class are determined by the general laws of distribution. Those who have once entered upon a given line of work do not readily change to something else. But a new generation is constantly coming upon the stage and they are turned this way or that, to the farm or the factory, according to the combined influence of attractions or repulsions and emoluments in the various occupations. Here is a force incessantly tending to equalize the status of the several classes of workers. The only question for the farmer to settle is whether he is likely to improve his condition by striking a balance with the inferior workman of Europe, incurring the expense of ocean transit and suffering annoyance from the uncertainty of a foreign market, or whether he is best off as he is, averaging up his lot with that of the superior American artisan, and finding a constant and reliable market for 95 per cent. of his products right at his door. He will also take into account the fact that a great part of his most lucrative crops would be absolutely worthless but for the presence of the neighboring factory town.

By the combined influence of almost unlimited land, highly perfected machinery and cheap transportation the Dakota wheat grower can undersell his Yorkshire contemporary in the markets of Liverpool. Does any one imagine that the great railroad system which makes this possible would now exist had our country not possessed an army of trained artisans when the locomotive made its advent?

Another phrase of the relation of consumer and producer is met in the question of wages, or the share of the workman as compared with that of his employer. This also is a question not to any considerable extent determined by tariff regulations. But the absolute returns of the laborer to those of other countries are at least influenced by the tariff.

In order that the forces tending to keep our wages above those paid elsewhere may operate, we must be to some extent isolated from the rest of the world. Trade is a great leveler. Unrestricted it tends to equalize the condition of all those among whom it operates. The protection argument is not invalidated by the admission that it is scarcely probable that free trade would reduce wages absolutely to the European standard. The tendency would be in that direction, and this tendency is enough to lead us to set our faces against the free trade policy.

In the application of the general principle of protection to the several provisions of the McKinley law we must bear in mind that a protective tariff, satisfactory in most respects, already existed. Our main work therefore will be to criticise the changes authorized by this measure.

The distinguishing features of the McKinley law may be grouped under seven heads: 1. An increase in certain duties. 2. A reduction in others. 3. An extension of the free list. 4. Provision for drawbacks. 5. A system of bounties. 6. Reciprocity clause. 7. Certain changes in the internal revenue regulations, which we have already considered.

Under the first division the changes that have excited most comment have been those in the duties upon wool and tin.

In the year 1890 we imported wool and manufactures of wool to the value of $71,846,515, about 9 per cent. of all our imports. Only two other classes of imports exceeded this sum in value—sugar and coffee, neither of which falls within the pale of protective operations. Now, why should we import all these goods? You have heard it said that the finest grades of wool cannot be raised in the United States. Perhaps not in New York or Ohio or Michigan, but the fact needs to be pretty carefully demonstrated before we conclude that nowhere in our vast country, with its great variety of soils and climates, can as fine wool be grown as cheaply as anywhere in the world. I doubt if such proof is as yet forthcoming. However, the McKinley law made very little change in the rates upon the higher grades of unmanufactured wool, so that the most that can be charged against it here is a negative attitude. On very cheap grades of wool, valued at thirteen cents a pound (more or less), the duty was nearly doubled. But these certainly cannot include the fine grades that cannot be raised in this country.

The rates on woolen goods were materially raised. No one, however, can show why our woolen fabrics should not be manufactured at home. The critic can only recite the general free trade argument, applicable to the greater part of our industries, that our superiority is less pronounced in this field than in agriculture.

In the case of tin plate similar considerations might be urged. The bulk of such plate is steel, which we can as well prepare at home as to import it, while the tinning is also a process for which we are entirely competent.

The tariff on the ore (cassiterite) and on pig tin will not go into effect until July 1, 1893, and if after two years' trial the total output has not reached 5,000 tons the duty will be discontinued. Such an addition to the comparatively limited tin supply of the world may be confidently expected to reduce its price.

The most important reductions were those in the duties upon iron and steel. This reduction was very general throughout this class of manufactures, amounting to 9 per cent. of the duty upon sheet iron, 20 per cent. on common nails, from 6 to 38 per cent. on steel rails and so on. This, however, involves no abandonment of protective principles. For several years our output of iron and steel has fallen little short of the English product, and finally America has taken the lead. This gives one reason for believing that our iron industries can stand considerable competition. A second consideration is the confessedly great resources of America in this line. Finally these goods are so heavy that transportation charges form an important addition to the cost of foreign wares.

Why, then, you ask, is any tariff necessary? We reply that great as are our advantages in this field there is yet no reason to suppose them as great, relatively, as in agriculture, so that by the very convenient law of commerce formulated by free traders we cannot regard the perpetuity of our iron industries as yet assured without continued protection. In the second place, even were it possible for this business to flourish under free trade, the McKinley law deserves credit for not abolishing the tariff all at once. The most unconditional advocates of free trade admit that changes in commercial regulations must be introduced slowly. Trade is very sensitive to disturbing elements, and widespread ruin may follow in the wake of the most promising reform if urged on too fast.

The reciprocity section has been persistently misunderstood. Democratic organs for the diffusion of information (?) among the masses have found here evidence that protectionists do really recognize the beneficence of free trade. But they urge, If a little free trade is a good thing, why not more of it? The fact is there is not the remotest hint of an extension of the free list in the reciprocity section of the McKinley law. There are certain articles which the United States does not and cannot produce in quantities sufficient for home consumption. Such articles, in accordance with the policy of protection, are now admitted free of duty. But while the interests of our own country are best subserved in this way, no less advantage accrues to the countries producing these articles.

These countries imposed high duties upon our goods—many of them discriminating against American wares as compared with those of other foreign countries. Such a situation suggested that it would only be an act of becoming courtesy if these nations should reciprocate our favors by similar concessions. It was evident, however, that nothing of the kind would result from the native emotions of gratitude of those benefited. So the reciprocity section was proposed as a mild way of compelling what would not be granted voluntarily. As finally passed, it authorized the president "to suspend the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea and hides" as may be shipped here from countries less liberal in their policy toward us than are we toward them.

This section, then, instead of being a breach in the high wall of protection, is simply a provision for throwing out a few additional buttresses in case the illiberality of other countries requires it. The extension of the free list greatly relieves the consumers—by reciprocity an attempt is made to benefit the producers at the same time. To use a familiar phrase, it is only an attempt—ever dear to the genuine Yankee—to "kill two birds with one stone." He who frameth words to the purport that reciprocity is a step in the direction of free trade simply uttereth speech out of the abundance of his ignorance or perversity.

It is too soon to estimate accurately the results of the McKinley bill, yet some things are already apparent. In the first place, that dangerous surplus is wiped out, and government must exercise a wholesome economy in order to meet its expenses.

A second fact is that our foreign commerce in the year 1891 surpassed all previous bounds. Our imports were $5,000,000 more than in 1890. We exported $113,000,000 more than in 1890. How much this result was due to reciprocity it is not easy to determine, and besides the diversion of trade from accustomed channels is likely to take place slowly. But it is a significant fact that the last months of the year seemed to show the greatest increase. In October our exports were valued at $102,877,248, in November at $110,103,536, in December at $119,932,532. Never before in our history had our exports touched the $100,000,000 line for a single month.

The customs returns also show a decrease in the importation of articles upon which duties are imposed. This indicates that the bill accomplished its purpose in encouraging home industries.

A Military Doubt.

"Did you see a boy about my size round the corner?" a boy inquired of an elderly gentleman who was passing.

"Yes, I believe I did," said the man.

"Did he look ugly?"

"I didn't notice."

"Did he look scared?"

"I don't know. Why?"

"Why, I heard he was round there, and I don't know whether he wants to lick me, or whether he's afraid. I'm going to lick him. Wish I did!"—Exchange.

THE DRYAD.

have seen her limpid eyes,
Large with gradual laughter, rise
  Through wild roses' nettles,
Like twin blossoms grow and stare.
Then the hateful, envious air
  Whisked them into petals.

I have seen her hardy cheek,
Like a molten coral, leak
  Through the leafage shaded,
Of thick chickasaws, and then,
When I made more sure, again
  To a red plum faded.

I have found her racy lips,
And her graceful finger tips,
  But a haw or berry,
Glimmers of her there and here,
Just, forsooth, enough to cheer
  And to make me merry.

Often on the ferry rocks
Dazzling dimples of loose locks
  At me she hath shaken,
And I've followed—all in vain!
They had trickled into rain,
  Sunlit, on the braken.

Once her full limbs flashed on me,
Naked, where some royal tree
  Powdered all the spaces
With wan sunlight and quaint shade—
Such a haunt romance hath made
  For haunched satyr races.

There, I know, hid amorous Pan;
For a sudden pleading ran
  Through the maze of myrtle,
And a rapid violence tossed
All its flowerage—'twas the lost
  Coolings of a turtle.

English Policemen.

The police regulations in England are very different from those common in this country. The policeman there is not nearly so autocratic as he is here and would never think of using a club or striking a man, except in self defense. J. Gilmer Speed gives this story of their mild sway:

Upon one occasion a man came into my office and created a disturbance. I ordered him out. He declined to go, so I sent for a policeman. A sergeant came. I said to him:

"This man does not belong here and refuses to leave my office. Will you please take him out?"

I expected the sergeant to tell the man he must go, and then if he did not move on I expected to see the officer remove him by force. Not at all. The sergeant said, "You had better leave here, sir," and his tone was as respectful and civil as though he was asking a favor.

The man manifested no intention of leaving, and the police officer began an inquiry as to his reasons for wanting to stay. This so exasperated me that I put the man out myself, greatly to the astonishment and apprehension of the officer.

He explained to me that I had no right to interfere in the matter I had brought to his attention, and that doubtless the intruder would get out a warrant against me and have me arrested for assault.

A SOLDIER'S SECRET
BY CAPT. CHARLES KING.
U.S.A.

COPYRIGHT, 1892, BY J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THEM.

"Come out, all of you. Come and see them march away." It is that handsome regiment from the Queen City. And in a trice, men and women, they are pouring out upon the roof of the portico.

"Come along!" shouts old Berrien. "Come along! Let's give 'em a cavalry send off." And away he goes at the heels of the throng. "Come, Berengaria, you want to see this regiment, I tell you. It's a beauty. And such a band!" But Berengaria holds back an instant.

"Winifred, dear, your wraps are not here, and I fear it is too chilly for you."

"Oh, I'll throw my cape over her," bursts in Ridgeway. "Just the thing! Come, Miss Berrien. Where's your cape, Curly? You bring Mrs. Berrien, will you?" And, rejoicing in his finesse, Mr. Ridgeway offers his arm.

"My cape's down stairs in the office," answers Brewster, shortly.

"Yes, and whatever you do, Brewster, don't you go out in the night air without it," quietly remarks Dr. Holden at this juncture, as he follows the party.

"Orders are orders," laughs Mrs. Berrien. "Sorry for you, Mr. Brewster, but you'll have to see them through our eyes. Yes, thank you, Mr. Ridgeway," as she possesses herself of that young trooper's arm, "I shall be very glad of your cape." And Ridgeway, with one stupefied backward glance, recovers himself and goes.

Winifred is still standing by the curtained window, half hidden by the projection of the chimney and its marble mantel. Very, very lovely she is in her dinner toilet, a simple gown, clinging in its soft, creamy folds about her slender form, a necklace of rare pearls, a beautiful quaint old heirloom, looped below her fair, rounded throat, its pendant rising and falling rapidly, unevenly now, for her heart is throbbing hard. One moment Brewster hesitates, casts a quick glance around, then steps forward to her side.

"Possibly, we can see from this window, Miss Berrien," he says, as he raises the shade. And together they disappear into the curtained alcove.

But they cannot see. This window, like the other, looks upon the roof of the portico, and the backs of their numerous friends are visible, but not the street—not the departing soldiery in whom such interest is felt. It is chilly here by the cold, glassy barrier. A bright coal fire is blazing in the grate. Both have been warned not to take cold, yet neither seems to think of that fire.

"No, I'm afraid we can't see them here," says Winifred, inanely. "But won't you go and get your cape?"

"I saw them today, and I can see them again tomorrow."

"Tomorrow? Where?" And now the dark eyes, full of trouble, glance quickly up.

Hear those sounds from below! The shrill voice of the colonel: "Column of fours. Break from the right to march to the left." The inevitable boom, boom, br-r-oom, boom, boom, of the drums. Loud plaudits and cheers from the crowd. Lively applause from the portico. Low voice are indistinguishable here at the window. Brewster pulls down the shade; it may shut out the noise, thin as it is, and so long as one can't see anything, why have it up?

"Where?" she repeats. "I thought they went east, and that we"— But she gets no further. The pearl pendant is rising and falling like a storm tossed shallop. Her slender fingers are nervously twisting and untwisting her filmy handkerchief. Tramp, tramp, tramp, echoing the drum beats, the column of fours is striding away down the applauding thoroughfare. Then, as the band clears the left flank of the line and opens out across the street, joyous, spirited, ringing, it bursts into martial song. Where had she heard that introduction before? Surely there's something familiar. But she has no time to think of that now.

"I supposed—you never cared for—detached service," she falters. "But—is it your wound?"

He shakes his head:

"Three months ago I would not have left the regiment. Now I am better anywhere away from it."

Oh, Curly, Curly! "What fools these mortals be!" You should have sense enough to see how utterly the situation has changed. You ought to know that something more than gratitude has prompted all old Berrien's clumsy efforts at cordiality. You ought to see by Mrs. Berrien's unaffected kindliness that the cloud has been dispelled. Why stand in your own light, a victim to this bumptious pride, striving to persuade yourself that had it not been for the fortunes of war her father would have interposed today as sternly and positively as he did before and she—she would probably have as meekly, tamely submitted as she did that bitter night of parting at the gate? Can you never forgive that unresponsive hand, that half shrinking, constrained goodby?

He is silent, waiting for her reply. He will not look at her, for her beauty dazzles, almost drives him wild with passionate love and longing. He has worshiped her, adored her as loyal knight might worship his queen of love and beauty. Down in his heart of hearts her image has lived through every instant of the fierce campaign and reigns there now, rebel against it as he may. Her silence daunts him. If he had thought to pique or trap her into questioning, it was unworthy of his love and her. Her little hands are clasping now. She has started, raised her head, is listening intently. Absorbed only in her, in his love, in his wrongs, Brewster has lost all ear for the thrilling, martial music growing fainter and fainter down the street, but the look in her sweet face startles him. The color has fled. The dark eyes are dilating. One little hand is uplifted, as if to ward off any other sound. Borne on the night wind the strains come full and rich upon the ear. No wonder the girl is silenced, stunned. Oh, for the clasping mother's arms now! Oh, for the love, the wordless sympathy, that was hers that cold, gray wintry morning when the battalion with its loved ones strode buoyantly away down the winding road at Pawnee! All the heart breaking sorrow, all the vague, throbbing, quivering pain, come back to her again as now she leans breathless against the casement listening to the same sad, sweet, tearful old song:

Love not, love not, ye hapless sons of clay!

One instant only she stands trembling there, then a great sob surges up in her throat, and, burying her face in her hands, she bursts away, she runs she knows not whither. Out into the deserted corridor, along the carpeted aisle she speeds. Then to her left, wide open, brightly lighted, she spies the elevator, and, with the leap of hunted hare to its form, she springs within. No one there. She tries to shut the sliding door, but now some one is there—Brewster—and his one arm is too strong for her two. An instant more and he is with her, blessing the fates that had carried off the attendant for a surreptitious look at the departing regiment. With quick decision Curly pulls the starting rope, and when the car has glided softly upward just half way to the next floor checks its motion, then springs to her side. Never till that instant had he known the full misery of a crippled and useless arm.

"Winifred, sweet one, listen!" he cries, seizing a slender wrist and striving to draw her hand away, as, sobbing, she crouches in the corner of the cage, while his brave young heart is thumping with a joy and exultation it never knew before. His blue eyes are aflame with love and gladness.

"Listen! Don't cry so! I must tell you."

R-r-r-r-ring! goes the confounded elevator bell. She springs to her feet, stifling her sobs, conquering her womanly weakness.

"Oh, do let me out!" she cries, dashing away the tears.

"I won't," he answers, with such a joyous, teasing triumph in his deep tones. "Though a million men a minute ring that bell, I'll never let you go now—never. You cruel, wicked, heartless girl, you sent me away"—

"Oh, do let me out, Mr. Brewster!" she pleads. "Indeed you must. [R-r-r-r-r-ring.] There's that awful bell again."

"You sent me away," he calmly continues, while his eyes dance and gleam, "utterly miserable because of your coldness and constraint. You knew I worshiped the very ground you stood upon. You knew I loved you better than anything in the wide world"— (R-r-r-r-r-B-r-r-r-r-ring!)

"I must go," she pleads, struggling hard to free the hand he has clasped. "Oh, do, Mr. Brewster."

"You shall; you shall the very instant you have paid toll, Miss Berrien," he laughs low. (R-r-r-r-r- B-r-r-r-ring!) "I'll put you out on any floor you wish, when you have said just two words."

"Oh, quick! Do let me go!" and she makes a frantic lunge at the starting rope, but too late. His daring arm is around her now. He can use but one, and that has enfolded and drawn her close to his breast. The clatter of the bell is deafening. "Oh, please," she murmurs, struggling in vain and glancing up in his glorified face.

"Not until you say, 'Yes, Carroll.' Now, quick! Winifred, do you love me, just a little?" No answer. Head bowed again, and now on the only available resting place. (B-r-r-r- B-r-r-r-r-r-, B-r-r-r-ring!) "I can't hear," he laughs low and joyously, and the blond head bows until the curling mustache is sweeping her flushed and tear wet cheek. "Did you speak, Miss Berrien?"

"Yes, Carroll." A mere whisper.

"Louder, please, Miss Berrien." Oh, what eloquence there is in that one clasping arm!

"Oh, please, let me go! Yes, yes! yes!—if I must." And then the bell rattles madly, but unavailingly, and for the instant neither hears. For the instant she can speak no more, for the soft, red lips are sealed.

Two minutes later, as that brightly lighted car glides down and comes to a stop at the parlor floor, a flushed and wrathful youth confronts the tall cavalryman who calmly steps forth as though on air and holds out a warning hand.

"Young man, if ever I hear of you quitting your post again and allowing a novice to get caught between floors, you'll get into trouble. It's lucky for you I'm the only one who can tell anything about it this time." But the wrath is gone, and with bulging eyes the boy glares at the round gold piece in his palm, then at the vanishing lieutenant and then into the empty car.

Homeward bound! The horses are all aboard. The second battalion has steamed away. Berrien's men from the car windows are answering the cheers of the crowds of citizens assembled to see them off. The ladies, safely ensconced in the cozy interior of the Pullman, are saying adieu to the number of friends, army and civilian, who have accompanied them to the train. The conductor has just reported "All ready, sir," to Major Berrien, who goes back in command, and Winifred, clinging to her mother's side, peers eagerly over the heads of the surrounding throng. Holden signals to his better half to come off, unless she prefers going back to Pawnee without him, and with much laughter and playful effort to keep her aboard, in which the jovial major is most prominent, that popular young matron is finally lifted from the rear platform. Mr. Ridgeway, who has attached himself to Miss Berrien's side, becomes suddenly aware that she has disappeared and returned to the interior, also that Curly Brewster, waving a brown telegraph envelope over his head, has shouldered his way into the crowd and is making for the car. "Wants another goodby word, I suppose," growls Ridgeway to himself, in deep disgust, yet comforted with the thought that the train will be off in a moment, leaving Brewster behind. Far forward a bell begins to ring, the steam to hiss; the couplings of the box cars jerk and strain; the horses snort and stamp in their wooden cages; the motion reaches the rear of the train, and the Pullman leaps forward with sudden start, then settles into slow, gentle glide along the polished rails.

"Tumble off, Brewster!" shouts Ridgeway in feverish anxiety. "You'll be carried away if you don't."

"Shut up, Ridge," whispers Randolph unsympathetically. "He's carried away for good. It's you that's left."

"Why, hello! here's Brewster!" booms the major as he enters the sunshiny car, when at last the crowded station has faded from view. "Thought you were ordered to Washington, lad? Changed your mind, eh? What, Berengaria?"

"Be quiet, Dick," whispers his smiling wife. "He hasn't changed his mind. Neither has Winifred."

But Holden is not the only one of the Pawnee party who remains. Sergeant Ellis has a furlough to visit Louisville, and is to take the train thither. In his cavalry uniform he was at the station to see his comrades safely started, and the last cheers of the troopers were for him as he stood with kindling eye and flushing cheek, the center of a crowd of curious citizens. As the train disappears around the distant curve Holden touches his shoulder.

"At noon, Ellis?"

"At noon, sir," is the prompt response; and the sergeant recovers himself and, springing to attention, raises his hand in salute. Holden smiles.

"I fancy that's about the last time you'll be doing that sort of thing," he says significantly.

"You may rest assured that the impulse will remain, doctor. It is the outward sign of an inward respect that every day has only served to strengthen."

At noon Holden is at the hotel with a carriage, and Ellis, transmogrified, a decidedly distinguished looking civilian, steps forth from the vestibule and joins the doctor.

"To Warren L. Guthrie's office," is the brief order, and the carriage rolls rapidly away.

"Mrs. Holden is with Miss Guthrie now," says Holden, after a moment's silence. "As yet she is to be told nothing—as you desire; but should we hear favorably as to the commission before our return to Pawnee?" he asked tentatively.

"No, doctor. If we meet again it must be as I was, not what this campaign has made me."

"What you have made yourself, man! Don't talk of it in that way. The Lord made you a gentleman. You made yourself a soldier."

Ellis smiles.

"A gentleman despite night prowling and petty larceny?"

"Well," says Holden, "that's something I leave you to settle with her. It seems you only carried out a fair warning, though of course you had no idea of the ghastly effect it would have. But you never told me how you reached that balcony."

"Easily enough, doctor. I simply took a light rope and grappling hook from the firehouse, climbed up the rear porch at the end away from where Kathleen and Murphy were, went along the south slope of the main roof to the chimney, slung the rope about it and lowered myself gently to the balcony, then threw off my overcoat and stood at the open window. She had gone, and I thought I was too late, but catching sight of the very picture whose return she had demanded and which I had sworn to have again as well as to see her, I was just entering when I heard her step upon the stairs. I did not see her. I do not see how it was possible for her to see me; yet there came that scream of terror, and the fall and then the rush. It all flashed over me in an instant that I had been guilty of a mad brained prank—that it would never do to be caught there; it could never be explained. I was up on the roof in a second, snatched away the hook and rope, crouched down to the back porch, waited a moment for Murphy and Kathleen to run inside, then slid to the ground, hid the rope under the woodpile in the dark cellar, squeezed through a gap in the fence into the captain's yard next door—they were all over at the Hazletts'—then donned my overcoat and joined the men running up from the laundresses' quarters. Late at night, as the sentry told Captain Rolfe, I went back, ostensibly to get my pipe, and recovered the rope and hook. That was all."

Holden ponders a moment:

"My wife has told me what she knew of your interview with Mr. Guthrie after poor Jack's death; but Miss Guthrie would never speak of what passed between herself and you."

On the pale, clear cut face the lines of care and sorrow and privation seem to deepen. The shadows darken about the mournful eyes. "I suppose I should never have blamed her as I did," he answers, "but I was mad with grief over Jack, with helpless, hopeless indignation over Percival's accusation; and then, of all others, to have her turn against me as she did—that was the bitterest cup! Her father's influence in her overwrought condition was what did it, I suppose; but she drove me from her sight as though I were indeed a felon, demanded the return of every line and trinket she had ever given me—even that prized little carte de visite I had carried about me for a year. It was then, when she declared she would never look upon my face again, that I went wild with misery, or despair, I suppose. I swore that sooner or later she should see me, and that before I died her picture would be back here in its old place, and then I left her. God knows, the experiences of the years that followed might have knocked the romantic nonsense out of any man. My poor sister seemed to be the only one who had any faith left in me. I wandered all over the west as Ralph Erroll, mining, 'grub staking,' working like a dog.

"I was starving in the hills when Brewster came to my aid. I couldn't take his money without telling him something of my story, but I gave no names. He doesn't know today anything about the old trouble—doesn't dream that he well knows the people who were once my most cherished friends. It was through him I enlisted, and within three months a mine I had located and yet couldn't sell for a dollar began to pay. By the time we reached Pawnee my half interest in it proved worth all my years of toil. Then I thought to see her again—took my furlough at the very time her father was west trying to find me and undo the wrong he had done, and—you know the rest. She was here, and I returned only to learn that she was about to leave and that Captain Rolfe was her accepted lover. Bearded, aged, uniformed as I was, I believed she would not know me even if we were to meet face to face, and believing, more, that no vestige of the regard she once felt for me remained, believing, too, that she was to marry Captain Rolfe, I was bitter, brutal, mad enough to strive to carry out my vow. Twice I had seen her on that balcony on the moonlit evenings, and I determined that the night of her departure she should see me for the last time. You know the rest. I shaved clean, so as to look as much as possible as I did in the old days, wore my civilian dress and—nearly killed her."

"It was a fearful experiment," says Holden gravely. "About the maddest thing you could have done."

"I was mad, doctor, when I heard she was to marry him. God knows I have realized it daily, hourly, ever since. And yet, how could she have seen me? She never reached the door."

"Simplest thing in the world. Nothing but the old principle in optics—the angle of incidence and the angle of reflection. That mirror over the toilet table did the job. I saw you in the moonlight at the balcony window when you couldn't see me in the dark hall, and neither of us could have seen the other had the mirror been away. Now here's Mr. Guthrie. Mind you, you've got to make amends for that harebrained performance at Pawnee; so no word of reproach to him. He's old and broken."

Three minutes later the clerk has retired, after ushering Holden and his friend into the private office. The instant the latch has clicked a gray haired, sorrow stricken man, tears standing in his fading eyes, hands quivering and trembling, totters forward and might have fallen but for the strong arms that catch and clasp him.

"My boy's friend! my boy's friend—whom I so wronged!" he falters, and then for awhile there is solemn silence.

"Is Mr. Percival's confession complete, and have you seen it?" asks Ellis gently.

"I have, my boy, at last."

"And it clears me, Mr. Guthrie?"

"Utterly and entirely," the old man cries. "I thank my God I was wrong—I was wrong!"

One scene more. Pawnee again. The night train has come from the east. Holden's carriage is at the station, and so is Brewster.

"All right?—all arranged?" whispers the doctor, as he springs from the car and grasps the lieutenant's hand.

"All right! Kenyon's just left him," answers Curly, and then busies himself lifting the merry children from the step, welcoming Mrs. Holden and carefully assisting Nita Guthrie to the platform.

"You happy fellow!" she murmurs. "How can I congratulate you? It's announced, is it not?" And for a moment she seems, despite pallor and fatigue, the old buoyant, radiant Nita.

"Announced?" answers Curly. "My mother-in-law elect—God bless her—says my face announced it before that elevator could reach the lower floor."

They drive rapidly up the winding road, and, though plainly nervous and excited, the fair guest never loses her presence of mind. She has something appreciative to say as they pass each familiar object—the lower gate, where the spruce sentry stands at a carry in salute; the guardhouse, where the relief is just forming; the broad west gate; the brightly lighted barracks across the parade; the group of trumpeters in the moonlight out under the tall, glistening flagstaff. Then come the rush of Murphy and Kathleen to open the door and assist them to alight; the rapturous greeting between the children and their Hibernian friends; the fragrance of coffee floating in from the kitchen; the hickory logs snapping and sparkling in the fireplace; the old familiar rooms; the swinging lamp in the hall.

"Welcome to Pawnee once more, Nita," says Holden, clasping both her hands. "We've had enough of pale cheeks and drooping spirits. We've brought you here to recall the roses—to win you back to joy and health, and to your own old room, Nita. Now will you promise not to faint this time, no matter what spooks you see?"

She is trembling violently. She looks into his beaming face with eager, questioning, imploring eyes.

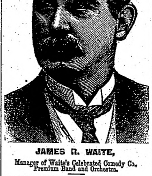
"Come, dear," whispers Mrs. Holden. "I'm going up with you."

The doctor summons the children into the dining room to see the lovely flowers on the table. Mrs. Holden twines her arm about her cousin's waist, and up the stair they slowly go. Nita trembles more and more. They are within a few steps of the landing, and as they come in sight of the open door Nita shrinks closer to her cousin's side. Three steps more and in the dark chamber there gleams that silvery shield of mirror between the dim white curtains, reflecting the dazzling moonlight from without. They reach the landing and Miss Guthrie pauses, breathless, unnerved. She can go no farther.

"Nita, it was no ghost you saw," whispers Mrs. Holden. "Shall I call him?"

One instant the blue eyes dilate, wild with hope, incredulity, joy and fear, all intermingled. Then there is the sound of a quick, springing step along the hall. A tall, dark haired, dark eyed soldier fairly leaps toward them. Nita turns quickly at the sound, and then with outstretched arms throws herself forward to meet him. No terror, no anguish now, but, as she is clasped to his heart, joy unutterable in her stifled cry, in the one word—"Harold!"

THE END.



JAMES R. WAITE,

ORDER FOR HEARING.

[First publication Nov. 3rd. 1892.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA, COUNTY OF POLK ss. District Court, 14th Judicial District.

In the matter of the estate of David L. Lusian—Insolvent.

It appearing to the court that Adolph F. Rauch, the assignee of the above named insolvent, has converted all the property and assets of said insolvent into money and is now ready to render a final account of his proceedings as such assignee and pay to the several creditors who have proved their claims the amount they may be entitled to, it is therefore ordered: That said assignee make a final account of his proceedings before this court at general term thereof to be held at Warren, Marshall county, Minn., on the 21st day of November A. D. 1892, at the opening of the court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard and that all creditors and the insolvent debtor then and there show cause why the account of said assignee should not be allowed as presented and why he should not be discharged from said trust upon the payment to the several creditors of the amount of dividend that is found due them by the court.

Let this order be served on the insolvent debtor and the creditors who have proved their claims, by a publication of this order in the Polk County Journal for two weeks, commencing November 3rd 1892 and by mailing a copy thereof to the insolvent debtor and to said creditors if their address is known to said assignee.

Dated Oct. 29th 1892.

Walter Latta is moving to the Walsh place, near the city.

Newest styles in gold and gold front brooch pins, at Saake's.

Andrew Steenerson moved into the city last week from his farm on the west side.

Beautiful new goods, suitable for holiday presents, at Saake's jewelry store.

Felix Fournet is putting in the steam-heating fixtures in the new Fournet block.

I. U. Jennings keeps every variety of furniture and guarantees to undersell them all.

Money to loan by Red River Valley Loan and Investment Co., opera house block.

W. N. Godfrey was in from Maple Lake on Wednesday on business before the county board.

Max Ericsson went to St Paul on Tuesday evening. He is contemplating going into business there.

Adolph Kœppe went to the twin cities last week to select his stock and fixings and hopes to open up business next week.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co., are building a large addition to their machinery depot on the corner of Broadway and Robert street.

Wm. Erdmann is making rapid progress on the jail. Has the south part nearly completed. This fine weather is great for brick masons.

Williams & Roberts on Thursday received two thousand dollars from the German Insurance Co., through their agent, I. U. Jennings. The first company to the front.

L. I. Benoit is getting his goods into his new store adjoining his old stand and will be ready to open out by Saturday night. S-a-a-y, but he will have a lovely store!

Do not fail to take your supper at the Congregational fair both evenings and help the good cause it is held for by purchasing some nice xmas presents after supper to take home.

On Thursday last, at the pastor's study, Mr. Wm. Schenke, of Thief River Falls, was united for life to Mrs. Lilly Kelly, the Rev. R. H. Battev officiating.

The river has frozen over and the small boy is getting barrels of fun with his festive skate. Plowing for the season is out of the question, but as it is all, or nearly all, done no one regrets the freeze up.

At the Congregational fair on Dec. 1st and 2d the rooms will be open and the goods on sale both afternoon and evening. A fine lot of fancy work done by several of the leading society ladies of Crookston will be found among the goods offered for sale.

Chris Anderson left on Friday of last week ostensibly for a visit to the twin cities and his creditors fear he will return no more. Mr. Anderson has always borne a good reputation and this action is a surprise to his friends.

Senator Burkhardt was summoned from Wabasha owiug to the continued dangerous illness of his son Henry and arrived on Sunday morning. Henry seems to be slowly improving but the fever hangs on with a tenacity that is discouraging. If they can manage to keep his strength up he may pull through all right.

Veronneau & Adams wish to inform their lady friends that they have no intention of going out of business (as some seem to have inferred). The special sale announced in last issue of the JOURNAL is for the purpose of reducing the fall stock to make room for the winter goods, Only this and nothing more. But remember our special sale is REAL and there is a bargain for every one.

The ladies and juniors of the Congregational church have been working for a fair which they propose to hold on Thursday and Friday, Dec. 1st. and 2d. We understand it is to be a regular store full of all sorts of goods, both useful and ornamental. Our readers may look for something very nice and worth their money and to suit their tastes, as the ladies of this church never do anything by halves or disappoint the public when they announce a good entertainment of any sort.

The Sunk Opera Company, which is to appear here Friday, Nov. 25th, have over three hundred dollars subscribed already for their appearance here. This is the finest attraction that the management of the opera house has so far been able to secure for our theater goers, and the effort to secure a large house should be encouraged, as the coming attraction is one of the best on the road. The prima donna of the company is Miss Marie Bell, who for some seasons has been almost the "star" of the Carleton Opera Company. Those desiring to subcribe can do so by calling at Tom Morris' jewelry store or the Fair. Those subcribing for tickets get the first choice of seats. Prices $1 for any seat in the house excepting boxes.

Buy your diamonds of Tom Morris.

Soft easy shoes for tender feet, at The Fair.

Be sure to see what Sture can do for you before you purchase.

New furniture constantly arriving at I. U. Jennings' furniture store.

C. C. Bartlett of Fertile, paid this office a pleasant visit on Tuesday.

Hardwood chamber suits at from $16 to $60 dollars, at I. U. Jennings' furniture store.

Tuesday was one of those lovely days you read about—regular Indian summer weather.

W. R. Schendel, who is interested in Thief River Falls real estate, was in the city Tuesday.

A new invoice of picture frames just received at I. U. Jennings' furniture store, to be sold very cheap.

Buy where you can buy the cheapest. Saake's store is the place. All goods 20 per cent. cheaper than other dealers.

S. L. Collins took his new hearse down to Neillsville last Friday to attend the funeral of John O. Sundit's mother who died there last week.

Best sweat pads at 75 cents per set. Best farm harness from $25 to $27; everything else in proportion at my closing out sale.

H. L. PEAKE,
Main street, Crookston.

B. Swanson and C. B. Peterson, two prominent citizens of Wylia, were in the city on Tuesday. They had heard that there had been an election recently and were jubilant over the result.

Duke Jewell grieves. His dandy driving mare is no more, having switched off from the earthly track on Tuesday and the places that knew her hitherto shall know her no more forever. Let her r. i. p.

We saw E. O. Flanders at Fertile on Tuesday morning looking as forlorn and lonesome as though he had not a friend in the world. He was on his way to Duluth to invest the wealth coined this year in wheat in mining stock.

Mrs. D. Lumsden of Chicago, a leader in the reform questions of the day, will deliver a lecture to LADIES ONLY in the opera house on Friday evening. Subject: "Woman, Her Health, Home and Happiness." Every mother and daughter should hear this lecture. Admission free.

Carl Weidenhoeffer, a prominent farmer living near Fisher, fell dead in the street in Fisher on Saturday, of heart disease. Mr. W. was one of the old settlers, a man very much respected by all who knew him. The funeral was largely attended on Tuesday, many going down from Crookston.

Attend the great fire sale now going on at Williams & Roberts' store in the opera block, and you will get some of the greatest bargains you ever heard of. Their stock was only damaged by water and a great deal of it is practically as good as new, but everything must be sacrificed or given away in 30 days.

Williams & Roberts intend to dispose of their entire stock of damaged goods within the next 30 days. These goods were only damaged by water and are practically as good as new. They have $16,000 worth of dry goods, clothing, underwear, boots, shoes, rubbers, etc,, and will dispose of them regardless of cost. Opera block, Crookston, Minn.

Rev. L. W. Squier would like to meet all the members and friends of the First Methodist Episcopal church in the lecture room of the church on Friday evening, November 18th, at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of organizing a Methodist social union for the city of Crookston. A special program is being arranged and refreshments will be served by the Epworth League.

In order that I may be able to commence and succeed with the erection of my store building on the corner of Broadway and Second street, I have decided to sacrifice my stock of jewelry, watches, clocks, silverware, etc., etc., regardless of cost or value. Every article suitable for Christmas presents.

C. H. SAAKE, the Jeweler.

On Tuesday afternoon Max Ericsson's team caused a flurry on Robert street by indulging in a bit of a go-as-you-please. No particular damage done except to the whiffletrees which were a total wreck. The funny part of the business was that Duke (Max's dog) sat in the buggy seat as calm as you please until the seat was pitched out and then he took a decidedly lively tumble to the situation—and to the ground.

F. B. Chapin, county superintendent of schools of Becker county, gave this office a pleasant call on Tuesday en route to Beltrami county to visit schools. Mr. Chapin was a candidate for re-election and the JOURNAL is pleased to be able to announce that he was elected. Mr. Chapin is one of the best superintendents in the state and the people of Becker county were wise to continue him in office. The people of Polk do not seem to care so much for experience in that office.

If you are curious to know how far a dollar will go in dry goods, go to Sture's, opera block.

If you have a farm or city property to sell, list with Red River Valley Loan and Investment company.

When you want a good photograph of yourself, go to P. E. Lynne's new gallery in the Anderson-Olson block—second floor.

Ladies, we would cordially invite an inspection of our fall and winter cloaks when preparing for cold weather. Prices to suit the times.

A. STURE.

Prof. Whittier, the optician, would be pleased to see all of his old customers and if any change is needed in their spectacles no charge will be demanded.

Grand closing out sale of jewelry watches, clocks and silverware at A. D. Morris store on Robert street. Remember, anything you want in jewelry you can get at a bargain.

Tom Morris' holiday stock of jewelry, silverware, watches etc., is beginning to arrive. A larger and more complete stock than ever before brought to Crookston. He invites a call.

A. Sture calls attention to his full and complete stock of dry goods and groceries and invites our readers to call and look him over. A little money will buy lots of goods at Sture's.

Don't forget that A. D. Morris will stay but a few days longer and he intends to dispose of his stock before he goes. Call and see what he can do for you in jewelry, watches, clocks or silverware.

Fontaine & Anglim are offering unheard of bargains in fall and winter clothing, as you will see by calling at their mammoth store and examining their stock. Anything you want at any price you want.

The Crookston Merchantile Co., received the full amount of their insurance—$7,000—and they are storing their salvage in the building next to McKinnon Bros. store-room on north Main street.

Jas. M. Bain of Fisher, the republican candidate for sheriff, was in the city last Friday and made the JOURNAL a pleasant call. Mr. Bain polled a good vote in his end of the county, and showed himself to be the strongest man the party could have put up.

If you need anything in the line of watches, clocks, silverware or jewelry of any kinds, call on A. D. Morris' at his jewelry store and take advantage of his great closing out sale. They go without regard to cost to close out. It will pay you to bear this in mind and call.

Prof. Whittier, the great optical specialist and expert fitter of spectacles will again open up an office in Crookston, Minn., Reckitt block. Take the elevator to room 123, he will be here for one week commencing Monday, Nov. 21st. Office hours from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Eyes examined free.

It is no use denying it. Crops are poor and the price of wheat is too low. The question arises for every farmer how to make ends meet and have some money to spare. We have one suggestion to make. It is this "read Locken & Holmboe,s adds" or better still visit their store and see how far a dollar goes at that place.

Williams & Roberts have made a satisfactory settlement with the insurance companies holding risks on their stock of goods which was damaged by the recent fire. They received the full amount of their insurance—$7,000—and were allowed to keep the salvage. They are now drying their stock of clothing and when this is done, they will sell their entire stock at sacrifice prices—in fact whatever they can get for it.

Prof. Whittier is a graduate of one of the best ophthalmic colleges in this country. His diploma hangs in his office for the public's inspection. This coupled with 15 years experience is convincing enough of his ability. The profession of optics is a special science as dentistry is, and should be so recognized. Prof. Whittier is of the opinion that eyes are as precious as teeth, and yet many people will go long distances to consult a competent dentist, while for glasses they would patronize an ordinary peddler (calling himself an optician) whom they never saw before and will never see again. At Crookston Minn., one week commencing Monday Nov. 21st.

A. E. Kœppe, who has been in the employ of H. F. Brown for about seven years as a cigarmaker, has decided to start in business for himself, and thinks Crookston a good enough place to locate in. He has rented the building now occupied by G. W. Peake as a harness shop, on Main street, and will open up as soon as he can get possession of the building and get a stock on hand. Mr. Kœppe is a good cigarmaker, and his long residence in Crookston has given him an acquaintance which will be valuable to him in business, and his pleasant disposition has made him lots of friends.

A. C. Rhinehart was in St. Paul last week.

C. G. Rapp of St. Hilaire was in St. Paul last week.

A. G. Gallasch rusticated in St. Paul last week.

Earnest Miller is building a large granary on his farm.

H. B. Laughlin and A. W. Trusdahl of Fisher, were in the city Sunday.

Rev. Savgstag is intending to build a large barn on his farm this winter.

New millinery and new Japanese goods at Mrs. I. U. Jennings' millinery store.

Shoes, shoes, all kinds, latest styles, lowest prices.

A. STURE,
Opera Block.

Blankets, blankets, all the way from $1 up to $6.50—beauties—all wool—at A. Sture's.

Go to the fire sale of Williams & Roberts for big bargains in clothing and dry goods.

Call at A. Sture's and secure one of those lovely flannel dress patterns, 54 inches wide, only 50 cents per yard.

Bert Duntley has rented the room recently occupied by Mrs. E. E. Bangs, is fitting it up and will soon open a first-class restaurant. It will be called the "Cafe," and will be strictly first-class in every respect.

Saake, the Robert street jeweler, has a full and complete stock to choose from, and can give as good bargains as can be had anywhere in the city. Try him.

Remember that A. Sture, in the opera house block is prepared to give great bargains for cash. A very little money buys stacks of goods of Sture. Try it once.

Do you know Herb carries a full stock of musical goods from a mouth organ to a guitar? Everything it that line you need he has and he invites you to call and look him over.

W. E. McKenzie, of the Times, and H. E. Cooke, of the JOURNAL, went to St. Paul on Thursday night of last week. Some way Mac seemed to be doing all of the celebrating.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings can always be found at her old stand on Robert street ready to show you the latest and most approved styles of millinery and will sell at prices corresponding to the times.

Ulric Beaudoin begs leave to announce that he nas opened the only shop in this city exclusively for the repairing and cleaning of clothing. Castaway garments, unless absolutely worn out, made to look as well as new. Trial order solicited. One door south of Medical Hall.

A man named P. O. Shalrud, living near McIntosh, sold his farm and with about $300 left for Edmonton, N. W. T., to get work in the mines. On the way he fell in with a man who, finding out that Mr. S. had money, murdered him but was himself shot and killed while attempting to make his escape. Mr. S. has a son living near McIntosh.

On Monday morning of this week the writer met E. D. Childs wandering about the streets of St. Paul trying to find some consolation in the election returns. Mr. Childs said that he felt well satisfied with his vote for commissioner as he ran even with his party vote and had made no special effort for election.

Geo. W. Peake, who went to Minneapolis a short time since, has purchased a half interest in a hardware store at that place that is doing a big business. He has also purchased a house, already furnished, a short distance from his store, and will remove his family to Minneapolis as soon as he can dispose of his harness stock and household furniture here. Mr. Peake is one of the oldest inhabitants in Crookston, where he has made an independent fortune in his business and in fortunate speculations in real estate.

Mrs. Joseph Netzer died suddenly last Friday afternoon of congestion of the brain, at her home in this city. She was enjoying her usual good health until Thursday, when she took sick, and gradually grew worse until the next afternoon, when she died. She was buried Sunday afternoon, and although it was a bitter cold day, there was a large turnout of friends to accompany the remains to the cemetery. Deceased was 62 years of age and was well liked by everyone with whom she came in contact. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn her loss.

A. Chabot is bound to keep ahead if enterprise will do it. Last Friday evening he had the Queen City rendering selections of music in his handsome store which was visited by a large number of people—gentlemen as well as ladies—who were interested in examining the fine display of goods. His stock is rich in quality and large in quantity, and was neatly and artistically arranged. The band was under the direction of Fred Walker and the music rendered was up to the standard of excellence of that organization. Mr. Chabot's staff of assistants is composed of the following: Mr. D. Sylvester, bookkeeper; Mr. C. S. Mills, who did the draping so tastily for the grand opening; Mr. Boyd Monroe, who attends to the cloak and shoe department; A. O. Sandeon, domestic goods; Misses S. Robert, Minnie Martin and Gertie Remshardt, notion department; and Messrs. O. Mercil Jr. and Chris Tweiten, who look after the clothing department two doors north of the big double store.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The young ladies of Hauge's Lutheran church gave a festival Tuesday evening, which was well attended and a handsome sum realized for their church.

The Red River Valley Elevator company, in their new location, between Third and Fourth streets, are now prepared to buy or ship for farmers, at reasonable rates, their wheat or other grain. Mr. Wm. Munch, their representative here for the last five years, is still with them and requests all his old friends and patrons to call on him in his new place of business. All others he would ask to give him a trial.

O. J. Barnes of the firm of Barnes & Slocum has forsaken his bachelor friends and gone to join the long list of benedicts. He left last Sunday evening for Fulton, Wisconsin, where he was married on Wednesday, the 16th inst to Miss Dorothy P. Crain, of Edgerton, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes will spend their honeymoon in the east and return in about two weeks. Mr. Barnes is one of Crookston's most energetic and successful young business men, and aside from the friends he has made in a business way, he has made any number of staunch friends in a social way, and each and all of them unite with the JOURNAL in wishing him and his bride long life, happiness and prosperity.

Thanksgiving Day.

In their determined revolt from the corrupt, licentious and tyrannical rule of the Stuarts, and from a state church, the Puritans were unable to separate the practices of their enemies from their principles. The Cavalier danced around the Maypole and made Christmas a season of prolonged feasting and jollity. The Cavalier was a monarchist and a prelatist, abhorred by the chosen people. Therefore Maypoles and Christmas feasts were abominations. But though the Puritan adhered to his standards with stern fanaticism he could not altogether keep down his human nature. So he invented "Thanksgiving Day" giving it a semi-religious character. The practical result was to give sanction once more to innocent and hearty amusement. The best thing about thanksgiving is, that it is a day of "home-coming." The sons and daughters scattered to homes of their own, return once a year to the spot where they were cradled, and to the arms that held them in infancy. Have you such an old home and an old father and mother in it? Speed to spend the day with them—and if your journey is by rail, buy your tickets via the Burlington route; your home agent has them—or you can write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Schools at Motley have been closed owing to the prevalence of small pox.

Winona's elegant new opera house is almost completed and will be opened on Monday evening, Dec. 5.

The Little Falls Daily Herald has suspended publication after an existence of about six months.

Karl Weidenhoffer, a prominent and wealthy farmer of Fisher, died suddenly last week of heart disease.

Fire at Welcome, eight miles west of Fairmont, destroyed five business houses, causing a loss of $30,000.

Four incendiary fires were started in one evening last week at South Minneapolis. Kerosene was freely used by the firebugs.

James Keenan, a wealthy farmer residing at Spring Valley, was knocked down and relieved of $500 at Winona Thursday.

M. J. Sontag, of Mankato, father of the famous train robbers, has left for California, the scene of their latest escapades.

Nichols Neeb, a well known character at Tower, committed suicide by taking paris green. A bosom friend of his named Andrew Reifer, committed suicide four years ago, and Neeb believed he was called upon by Reifer's spirit to follow.

A destructive fire wiped out all of the business part of Lamberton, on Front street, Saturday night. The Tracy and Springfield fire departments were sent for and assisted in extinguishing the flames. The total damage amounts to about $25,000.

Charles Bazille and Mrs. Alice Ballard have been arrested at St. Paul charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of W. J. Dunneback. It is claimed by the police that they threw Dunneback down stairs, causing injuries which resulted in death.

Dr. G. O. Welch, of Lawrenceboro, Mass., was appointed superintendent of the Fergus Falls insane hospital, at a meeting of the trustees held at St. Paul last week to succeed Dr. A. P. Williamson, who lately resigned from the management of that institution. Dr. Welch comes from a similar institution in the East, and is highly recommended.

By comparison, the increase of insane patients in Minnesota was 167 for 1891 up to Nov. 1, and 115 for 1892. The number of convicts decreased 10 for 1891 and insreased 6 for 1892. St. Peter asylum had 939 inmates on Oct. 31; Rochester, 1,081; Fergus Falls, 249; total insane, 2,269. Confined in other state public institutions are 3,866 persons, an increase over 1891 of 176.

The notorious American forger and confidence woman, Mrs. Annie M. Murphy, for whose capture numerous rewards are offered, has been traced to Montreal. Detectives are now busy trying to locate her. The last crime for which she is wanted was committed on Oct. 27, when she victimized the First National bank and German American National bank at St. Cloud by cashing forged drafts for large amounts.

CLOAKS!

Some time ago, we ordered a second shipment of Cloaks, to be delivered November 1st. Owing to an unusual delay for which we were not responsible, the house wrote us to slaughter the prices on these goods and they would stand the loss, rather than have them returned. Therefore, during the rest of this month you can obtain a handsome, stylish garment for less than they can get them made for.

Members present: Kirsch, Rhinehart and Demers.

The minutes of last session were read and on motion approved.

The sw¼ sec. 6 twp. 140, r 43, belonging to Ephraim Morinville, was detached from school district No. 81 and attached to district No. 27.

Satisfactory proof having been furnished of the regular posting of notices in the matter of the granting of a hearing on the petition for the establishing and laying out of a county road from the village of Red Lake Falls to Terrebonne township, described as follows: Beginning at the nw corner of sec. 26, twp. 151, r. 44, and running thence south on the section line to the town line at the sw corner of sec. 35, twp. 151, r. 44, thance east on the town line between the town of Red Lake Falls, Lake Pleasant, Gervais and Terrebonne to the point of intersection of said line with the Clearwater river, thence following the south bank of the Clearwater river in an easterly direction nearly one-half mile to the mouth of the creek on the ne¼ of ne¼ sec. 3, twp. 150, r. 53, thence in an easterly direction across the flat bend to the river thence following the south bank of the river to Ames Bros. & Smith's grist mill to a point near where the quarter line between east and west halves of nw ¼ sec. 2, twp. 150, r. 43, crosses the Clearwater river, thence south on said ¼ line to south line of sec. 2, twp. 150, r. 43,, where said quarter line crosses the town road: Messrs Rhinehart, Erwin, Demers and Kirsh were appointed a committe to examine such proposed county road. "The 30th day of November 1892 at 1 o'clock p. m. was designated as the time, and the store building of Ovide Moreau, Terrebone twp. the place for said committee to meet for said purpose.

W. N. Godfrey was granted an abatement of the interest on his lots in Maple Bay townsite delinquent from the year 1886, conditioned he pay the same within 20 days from date. The building committee on the county jail reported having authorized the issuance of a warrant for $1200 in favor of W. Erdman, as a partial payment on his contract.

The application of Stark Anderson was laid on the table. The communication of J. J. Hill, president of the G. N. R. R. Co. relative to the refusal of said company to pay any assessments resulting from the proposed opening of a ditch through Parnell and Crookston townships was read and ordered filed. The board thereupon ordered a discontinuance of all the preliminary steps taken relative to the opening of said ditch, as prayed for by S. M. McKee and others.

The communication of Attorney-General Clapp relative to the propriety of the county in compensating the clerks of the several towships for mileage incident to the receiving of ballots for the general election, was read and ordered filed.

The Crookston Tribune was allowed the sum of $25 for publishing the official vote cast at the last general election as the same has been returned and canvassed, by each election precinct.

The application of Mrs. A. J. Streeter for an increase in salary of $10 per month as hospital matron was granted from Dec. 1st 1892.

sang the poet and the many great changes in this work-a-day world go to confirm the poet in this opinion. Of all the changes recently occurring none greater than the transformation of Mrs. E. E. Bangs' Second street millinery store into a restaurant—where erstwhile was displayed worlds of millinery "just too sweet for anything," now may be seen substantial tables and a lunch counter just loaded down with eatables in every variety with all kinds of pies'n things on the side whereby the inner man may be greatly refreshed and re-invigorated, fortified for the battle of life. Bert has spared neither time nor expense to fix up a little gem of a place, and has taken pains to fix up a place that will commend itself to all, and he has accomplished his desire. Here the farmer may find a good substantial meal "as your mother used to prepare it," all for a moderate price; here the business man, who has not time to go up home to dinner may find the nice little lunch all ready for quick discussion, in fact all classes may find at Duntley's Cafe abundance of material to "fill a long felt want" at figures to suit every purse. Try it.

Neil Cummings, a wheat-buyer at East Grand Forks, who has been shipping wheat for several farmers secured the proceeds of several carloads of wheat and lit out not long ago. Shortly after he had gone, a stranger appeared at East Grand Forks and inquired where the family of Neil Cummings lived. He was shown the house, went there and inquired for a young lady employed there to whom he handed a letter in presence of Mrs. Cummings. The young lady retired to her room to read her letter followed soon after by Mrs. Cummings who was suspicious that the letter was from her recreant better (or worser) half. When she reached the room the young lady was so absorbed in the perusal of the letter that she did not notice Mrs. C. until that lady, discovering the the familiar handwriting of her absent lord took the letter out of her hands and then the fat was all in the fire for it was indeed from the absent one and invited the young lady to come to California, in company with the bearer. Mrs. Cummings laid the case before the proper authorities who at once took steps to have Mr. Cummings arrested, and Sheriff Grundysen started for San Bernardino on Thursday evening to bring him back. Most of the money was recovered.

Joseph Laframboise informs the JOURNAL that he raised as high as thirty bushels of wheat per acre on some of his land and on some of it eighteen all of which graded No. 1 hard. He says he came to Polk County 13 years ago with $2700 and to-day would not take $15000 for his property in the county. He has never had one crop failure and has made some money every year, but he does not do it by simply raising wheat. Mr. Laframboise is noted for having some of the best stock in the county. Says he has wintered young stock before now at the straw stacks with no other shelter—though he prefers to have good stables as a rule. He is about to build barn room for 50 head of cattle that as yet has had no shelter this winter. Mr. L. says he can no reason why a farmer can not make a fortune in this country, and live like a king as he can raise nearly every thing he needs to consume and things that he must buy can be had as cheaply here as anywhere in the United States or Canada—where he came from.

Notice the new ad. of Dainard Bros. in this issue and go and see what the new firm can do for you. The boys are hustlers and intend to do a first-class business in every particular. They are always prepared to pay cash for beef cattle, hides and furs, and solicit the farmers' trade.

Don't forget that Tom Morris is in the market to supply all your wants in the jewelry line.

Henry Burkhardt, who has been ill with typhoid fever, is very much better this week.

An ice rink is being built on the river near the St. Louis hotel.

Lou Freeman was over from Grand Forks on Tuesday.

Frank Barnum is packing household goods to-day and expects to leave for Sauk Center on Tuesday next. Frank's father has been appointed clerk of the court of Stearns County and Frank will have full swing in the Avalanche office.

Tom Morris desires to have JOURNAL readers call and examine his full and complete stock of jewelry—the largest ever brought to Crookston. He don't insist that you shall buy (unless you want good goods cheap,) we just want you to see the fine display he has. Bargains for all. Call and see.

George Vine and Chas. Smith will open a packing house in Crookston as soon as they can complete arrangements and will be prepared to offer the highest market price for hogs. See the boys before you sell your hogs.

Chas. Smith will take a furlough about the Christmas holidays and go home to visit the old folks for a few days. A well earned rest.

S. M. and J. A. Dainerd have bought out Smith's meat market on Broadway and will conduct the business under the firm name of Dainerd Brothers. They are old hands at the business and will fully sustain the reputation that market has made.

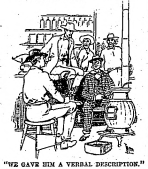
AN ENGLISHMAN'S TURKEY.

The Thrilling Tale of a Fatal Thanksgiving Error.

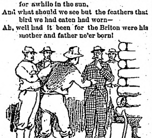
[Copyright, 1892.]

Bill Smiley? You're looking for Smiley? Well, pardner, that strikes me as strange.
Say, where do you live that you didn't know Smiley's gone over the range?
He departed this life last November, on the evening of Thanksgiving day,
And his farm is a range for the rattlers, his dugout is gone to decay.
Poor Smiley! You see, he was British; a nob right from London, I s'pose;
He used to go round wearing glasses and loud and excitable clothes;
And that land that he owned he pre-empted and farmed it in glittering style,
The mem'ry of which sort o' makes me dissolve in a vast, shoreless smile.
One day all the boys were a-sitting and talking in Higgins' store,
And somehow the argument drifted to Thanksgiving dinners of yore.



"WE GAVE HIM A VERBAL DESCRIPTION."

We each told our lies about turkeys as large as the site of a town,
And Smiley, he sat there and listened, and swallowed the anecdotes down.
It seems that in England the turkey is scarce as the horns on a dog—
The bird wasn't built for a country that's made up of rainfall and fog—
So Smiley was overly anxious to know how a turkey might look,
And we gave him a verbal description as clear as you'd find in a book.
Then what did he do but invite us to dinner on Thanksgiving day;
"The turkey I'll have," he assured us, "and cooked in the old fashioned way.
You tell me wild turkeys are met with sometimes in the woods about here?
All right; I'm a prince with the rifle. Remember, don't fail to appear."
Time passed, and it was soon November; the morning of Thanksgiving came;
We hadn't forgotten the turkey, and started to tackle the same;
We soon reached the Englishman's dugout, and Smiley was there with his feast;
His face was all lighted with pleasure and rosy as dawn in the east;
"I killed it—a beautiful turkey," he cried, "and as plump as a grouse;
I cooked it, and warrant the cooking; I was chef in a nobleman's house;
Sit down to the feast, though it's early; give thanks for the luck I have had;
This Thanksgiving day is a feature that England should copy, egad!"
Well, stranger, we ate and we wondered; that bird had a taste that was strange;
We'd eaten tame turkeys so often a wild one went queer as a change.
The dinner was lengthy, I reckon; it took us two hours to get done,
And then we went out of the dugout to loaf for awhile in the sun,
And what should we see but the feathers that bird we had eaten had worn—
Ah, well had it been for the Briton were his mother and father ne'er born!



"JIM SMITHERS EXPLAINED IT TO SMILEY."

Jim Smithers explained it to Smiley, that while it was painful to do,
We felt it our duty to hang him, and that when the swinging was through
We'd see that his body was planted; he'd covered us all with disgrace,
And unless he was hung we could never again look a man in the face.
He acted the man that we thought him and lent us his clothesline, and said
He hoped that we all would forgive him and speak of him kindly when dead.

The crime he committed? Well, stranger, I guess I may tell it to you—
The turkey he fed us was buzzard! We hung him; what else could we do?

WALT MASON.

THANKSGIVING'S LOVER.

[Copyright, 1892.]

BEFORE the great bakeoven built into the huge stone chimney of Captain John Folsom's house there sat a fair young girl on a lowery morning of November, 1777, and near her, basting a fat goose on the spit before a log fire, stood another even fairer than she. These maidens, clad in coarse linsey woolsey garments of homespun, their hair concealed except for a few locks that wandered from beneath the linen handkerchiefs with which it was protected, the sleeves rolled to the elbows, revealing arms that were fair to look upon, so white were they and of such exquisite roundness, were busy with the preparation of a feast, and the natural tint of their cheeks, which was as delicate as the peach blossom, was heightened by reason of the heat that came from the crackling logs.

She who stood at the door of the bakeoven hesitated a moment and turned her head slightly to one side, as though she listened. Then tossing her hand gently, as though to indicate that her ears had been misled, perhaps by the wind without, she opened the oven door and smiled as she perceived the fragrant odor which came from the cavern within. With a broom splint she penetrated the crust which surmounted a great pie that she might learn whether the baking was well done, and then she turned to her companion and said:

"'Twill be a fine feast for Uncle John when he returns today. Surely he said he would be back by noon."

The maiden who had the spitted goose in charge paused for a moment in her task of anointing it with rich gravy and said:

"Father will be here, I know, if the Lord permits, but in these dark days that are upon us, Abbie, who can tell what may happen to our militia, parading here and tramping there that they may observe the redcoats. Father had, I think, some serious business which led the company away last night, and mayhap he will not come to sit at dinner with us. 'Twill be a sorry feast for us if we must eat alone. How is the pie?"

"'Tis nearly done, I think, and such a pie we never made. 'Tis full of giblets, for you know that Uncle John delights to eat them covered with the gravy of the dish."

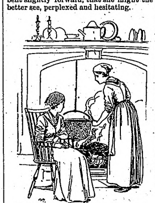
For some moments the maidens continued these preparations, and then she who was called Abbie went to the window, and peering out for an instant turned and opened the door, which creaked with mighty moans as it turned upon its rusty hinges.

"What is it that you hear, Abbie?" said the other.

"It seems to me that I hear the march of the company, and still I do not know but 'tis the wind. See, the snow has begun to fall a little." The other maiden arose and went to the door, and so they stood side by side peering out far down the highway to the turn of the road where it skirted the Long Island sound. And such a picture did these fair maidens make as they stood thus framed by the doorsill and jamb as would have delighted the eyes of any of the young men of that town.

"'Tis true, Abbie, 'tis true. I hear their step, and surely that is Ephraim's fife."

Abbie returned to the kitchen and made preparation for the great table to receive the bounty with which that day was to be celebrated, while the other maid stood awaiting the coming of her father. She saw the company as it marched around the bend in the road with her father at the head, and she was going forth to meet them when of a sudden she halted. The look of joy upon her face was changed to one of wonderment, and she stood, her head bent slightly forward, that she might the better see, perplexed and hesitating.



"BASTING A FAT GOOSE ON THE SPIT."

The company had come as near to the farmhouse as the meadow which adjoined it on the west, and there they halted, and the maiden saw that one was with them who was not of the company when they marched away the night before. He stood alone, erect, constrained, and she perceived that his hands were tied with thongs behind his back. She saw her father talking earnestly and seemingly directing some two or three of the company to take this man in charge, and scarcely knowing what she did she approached her father and was so near that she could have put her hand upon his shoulder before he saw her.

"Sir," she heard her father say, "you were captured within our lines without a pass and having no authority to be there. I am going to send you with a guard to the commander of our army, who is in the camp a dozen miles or so beyond. He will discover whether you are no British spy, but have strayed, as you have said, within our lines by accident."

"What has he done, father?" the girl asked, for she was filled with pity for this man who seemed so proud and yet so pleading in his manner.

"What, Thankful, is it you? Why are you here, my daughter?" said the captain.

"I came to welcome you, father."

"But this is no place for you. We have a prisoner."

"A prisoner? Surely he can do no harm. He is not like an army and he seems well favored."

"Nevertheless we found him wandering within our lines, and there are spies about, and he may be one of those."

"A spy? Surely I think not." And the girl went to the prisoner and stood before him in the innocence of maidenly confidence and looked full into his eyes, lifting her head to do so, for he was tall and seemed to tower far above her in his splendid presence.

"You are no spy," she said at last.

"No, my child, not a spy. I am an officer of the king's army who has strayed by accident within your lines. Thank you for your sympathy. You have beauty in your face, my child, but you have what is better—you have sympathy."

The girl went back to her father and she said: "Father, suppose my brother John, who is somewhere in the Jerseys with Washington, should by accident be captured by the redcoats. It would break your heart and mine if they took him for a spy. Surely there is truth in this man's words. Come, bring him with you. Don't you remember that it is Thanksgiving day, and that we are to have a roasted goose and a chicken pie, and Abbie has baked a glorious pumpkin pie? Let him come and be our guest, and I'll warrant he'll promise me that he will make no effort to escape until you hear from the general what shall be done with him."

The captain seemed to hesitate for a moment, and then turning to his prisoner he said: "Sir, I am myself impressed with your dignity of manner. It may be that you speak the truth. My daughter's intuitions are that it is so. I have changed my mind. I shall send a messenger to the general with a dispatch telling of your capture and then whatever he commands—that will I do. Meanwhile, sir, it is our feast day. We are accustomed every year after the harvest to give thanks to the Lord and to eat a great feast and make merry in our families. I will ask you to share this with us. You will be a prisoner, but I will take your parole that you will make no effort to escape."

"You do me honor, sir. I give my parole to you, and, if I may be permitted, to this fair maiden who has interceded for me."

They unloosed his thongs, and when his hands were free he stepped up to Mistress Thankful and he took her hand and bended over it with the courtesy and grace of one who had been accustomed to places where high breeding and gentle manners prevail.

They had a fine feast at Captain Folsom's table, and the British officer, being no longer under great constraint, became most companionable and even ventured gentle jest with Thankful and her cousin, Mistress Abbie, who served the meats and bounties with gentle dignity and unconscious grace. And when he turned to converse more seriously with Captain Folsom upon the war and its battles they—Thankful and Abbie—under pretense of some engagement for the preparation of the dessert, glanced furtively at him and exchanged confidences that he was a handsome man and well favored and moreover very young for one of his stature and of his rank, for it was plain that he was a high officer.

In the afternoon there was gentle merrymaking, and Captain Folsom, being greatly impressed with the manifest honor and nobility of his prisoner guest, had such confidence that he at last said: "Sir, I do not know whether your rank would permit me to call you captain or major or colonel, for one of these offices I know must be yours. You do not care to tell us your name or your rank, but I have that confidence in you that I am willing to leave you for awhile with these gentle guards, my daughter and my niece, for I have a mission of some consequence in the village, which is a few miles away."

"I am grateful for your confidence, sir, and shall not betray it. While these maidens guard me I shall protect them until your return."

"Will you promise to obey us?" asked Thankful in merry mood.

"In all things," he replied, bowing with grace and yet with the mock dignity of gentle sport.

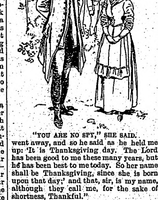
"I exact only one promise, sir," said the captain, "and that is that you will not quit this house until my return."

"I give that promise willingly."

After Captain Folsom had gone away the young officer sought even the more earnestly to entertain these maidens, and their intuition taught them that their charms had found favor in his sight, for he looked upon them with admiring glances, although with the greatest courtesy and deference. He told them stories of England which they were pleased to hear, and of life among the nobility there and how the ways of those titled people differed from the simple customs of their kindred in the American colonies, and he asked the maidens many things about their manner of life, and it was plain to see that Mistress Thankful had already won his high regard.

"Tell me," said he, "how is it that they call you Thankful? 'Tis a pretty name, and well given to you, I should say, but I never heard it before I heard them call you by it."

"But it is not my name," she said. "I have heard my mother say that on one Thanksgiving day they sent to my father who was in the church and bade him hurry home, and when he came he found me there, though I was not there when he went away, and so he said as he held me up: 'It is Thanksgiving day. The Lord has been good to me these many years, but he has been best to me today. So her name shall be Thanksgiving, since she is born upon that day;' and that, sir, is my name, although they call me, for the sake of shortness, Thankful."



"YOU ARE NO SPY," SHE SAID.

She said this with such modesty and with such delicious suggestion of grace, and her cheeks were so gently flushed and her eyes so bright, that the young officer could not conceal the admiration for her which had seized him, and when she perceived it she turned away with gentle coquetry. Thus this Thanksgiving afternoon, which had promised to be so dreary a time for him, was one of joy, and when the shades of evening came and the candles were lighted the maidens and the young officer were like those who had been long acquainted.

In the evening the girls brought apples and nuts and cider, and they were having a merry time when of a sudden Abbie arose and went to the door. Her quick ears had detected a strange sound. A moment later a lad came panting into the room.

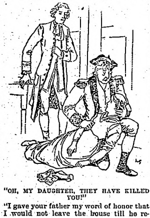
"Look out, Thankful, they are coming to attack you," he said, scarcely able to speak for lack of breath.

"They? Who? Who can attack us?"

"'Tis Ben Williams and his gang. 'Twas yesterday that the cowboys captured a lad—a cousin of Ben Williams—and for some reason they hanged him, and now Ben is bound to have revenge, and he has heard that there is a British officer here, and he swears he'll have him hanged to a tree for revenge."

A moment later a young man with a musket in his hands entered the door and he said: "Mistress Thankful, your father left me here on guard unbeknown to you. There's trouble brewing, I fear. They are coming to take the officer away and to do him harm. Let him go with me and I will hide him."

Thankful brought the officer's cloak and hat and bade him go, but to her amazement he refused. "I cannot go," he said.



"OH, MY DAUGHTER, THEY HAVE KILLED YOU!"

"I gave your father my word of honor that I would not leave the house till he returned."

"But you must. Ben Williams is a brute. He will take you out and kill you, sir. Go under the escort of the guard, and he will take you where you can be concealed."

But the officer would not stir. He would only say that he had given his pledge and he would not break it. In an instant Thankful seemed changed, and the officer, even in the suspense and terror of the moment, perceived that she had assumed the manner of one who has authority and can exercise it. She stood erect, her head thrown back, her eyes very bright, her cheeks now somewhat pale, and she said: "You must go, sir; I command it. Go with him. Hark! Don't you hear that mob shouting? You have not a moment to lose." And then as he did not stir she went up to him pleadingly and with gentle manner, not knowing seemingly what it was she said or did; she put her hand upon his arm with gentle touch; and she said, "Go, go; for my sake, go."

"For your sake?" he murmured, and seemed to hesitate, and then she turned to the guard and bade him lead the officer forth. But at that moment the cry of the mob was so distinct that it revealed that escape was impossible. Thankful bade the guard step in and bolt the door, and commanded him to use his musket if any one should try to force an entrance. And even as she spoke the door was forced and an ugly face was protruded, and some one shouted, "Come out, you redcoat!" and would have said more had he not been felled by the butt of the guard's musket.

The door was closed and bolted, and the guard stood with the manner of defiance. In an instant Thankful had made disposition of the officer. Before he was aware what she was doing she had led him to the settle in the chimney corner, and she bade him to be seated there. None too soon, for the window was forced open and some one shouted, "Come out, you cur, or we will shoot you where you are!"

"Oh, you coward—you coward, Ben Williams! He has done you no harm and he is unprotected," and Thankful speaking thus placed herself so that she stood directly before the officer. There was a crash, a confusion of sounds, for they were trying to force the door. The officer, then realizing that this fair maiden was protecting him with her body, pushed her aside, saying: "No, no, I cannot permit this. You must not be injured. Let me pass." At that moment a musket was discharged, and the officer, perceiving that Thankful was reeling, supported her in his arms. She had received the shot intended for him.

A moment later there was a mighty shout, a great rushing noise, the door was burst open, and Captain Folsom and some of his company entered. "What is this? What is this?" he said.

"Ah, uncle, Ben Williams and his gang are trying to capture the officer, and they have shot Thankful as she tried to prevent it," said Abbie, crying bitterly.

"Williams? Take him away; bind him; put him in the guardhouse with his gang!" the captain shouted, and then kneeling down over the body of his daughter he moaned, saying, "My Thankful, my Thankful; oh, my daughter, they have killed you!"

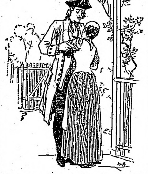
"They have killed her, sir, while she was trying to save my life," said the officer, and he wept like a child.

But she was not dead. They lifted her tenderly and carried her to her bedroom under the gable roof, and when they saw that she opened her eyes and that her lips moved they were rejoiced, and there was a prayer of thanksgiving to God that he had spared her life that night.

A few days later the order came from the general instructing Captain Folsom to deliver the prisoner under his charge to the outposts of the British army at the Bronx in exchange, for it was demonstrated that he had told the truth when he said he had strayed within the patriot lines by accident.

As he was about to go away he said to Captain Folsom: "I have one favor to ask. May I see Mistress Thankful for an instant alone?" It was permitted. He went and stood by her bedside and took her hand. "Thankful," said he, "I am going away. It is not right that I should speak to you except in thanks, for I am an officer in an army opposed to yours, but I may say this: I heard your unconscious confession when you bade me go for your sake, and your sweet words then uttered will be in my memory until I come back again when these battles are over," and then he kneeled tenderly over her and touched his lips to her forehead.

When he looked at her he saw the glance of exquisite joy which she could not conceal, and he perceived that gentle tears were coursing down her cheeks which she did not care to wipe away, and he knew that they were tears of joy.



"THANKFUL, MY THANKSGIVING, I HAVE COME."

Six years later, on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day, a traveler dismounted from his horse in front of Captain Folsom's forge—for the captain was a blacksmith in time of peace. The traveler looked curiously about, as though not sure that this was the place he sought, when his eyes rested upon a maiden who was standing in the doorway. It seemed to him as though the picture which he had seen in that identical spot six years before on the day of his capture was there again. He went up to her and said: "Thankful, my Thanksgiving. I have come."

"I knew you would," she said, and with such gentle sweetness of manner that he took her to his arms.

It was a grievous sorrow to Captain Folsom that his daughter Thankful was compelled to leave him when she married this man whose life she had saved, but it was a joy for him to know that she had a husband worthy of her. She had married Sir John Sterling and he took her to his estates in England, which were great, and there, as long as they lived, and to this day among their descendants, the last Thursday in November in every year is celebrated as a thanksgiving ceremonial, and in the evening to the children every year is told this romance of the day when their grandfather and great grandfather met his Thanksgiving.

SIGHT IS PRICELESS.
Do not persist in abusing it by ill-fitting glasses, sold by incompetent dealers and quacks, but consult a qualified optician, and have your eyes scientifically tested, and frames properly fitted to your face.
There is more injury done than people are aware of by improperly fitted glasses. Too strong, too weak, too narrow, too wide, too big, too little, poor glass, poorly made, ignorantly made, are a few of the most glaring faults. Daily does the result of this ignorance upon the part of the incompetent dealers in spectacles come before me in distressing cases of permanently impaired vision.

FARM AND GARDEN

THE APIARY.

When Should Bees Begin to Breed in the Spring?

"How early in the spring do you prefer to have your bees begin to rear brood?" was a query asked by the American Bee Journal of prominent beekeepers in various sections of the country. Here are some of the replies:

As soon as they leave the cellar.—C. C. Miller.

March, in this latitude (Wisconsin).—E. France.

When willows and soft maple begin to blossom.—R. L. Taylor.

As soon as pollen comes in from the fields.—G. M. Doolittle.

In our latitude (Georgia) the last of January.—J. P. H. Brown.

In this latitude (western Illinois) in February.—J. M. Hambaugh.

About the middle of April in this latitude (Iowa).—Eugene Secor.

As soon as they are removed to the summer stands.—C. H. Dibbern.

Not until there is a prospect of settled warm weather.—James A. Green.

Not much, if any, sooner than they can have frequent flights.—James Heddon.

I prefer to have them begin in the winter; not wait until spring.—A. B. Mason.

With a location for an early honey flow, the earlier the better.—Mrs. J. N. Heater.

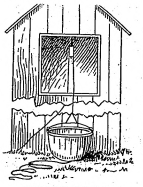
By the 1st of March. I often have two frames of brood in February (Michigan).—H. D. Cutting.

Let them begin when they see fit. They know better than we do when to begin.—Dadant & Son.

About the time natural pollen begins to appear, or about Jan. 20 to Feb. 1 in this locality (Texas).—Mrs. Jennie Atchley.

Hoisting Grain in Baskets.

The cut explains a practical method for one man to hoist grain, such as corn, etc., into the cornhouse in a bushel basket. Two ropes are necessary—one on the bottom of the basket as well as the hoisting rope.



ONE MAN CAN WORK IT.

The bottom rope will invert the basket every time inside of the granary, and between the two ropes the basket returns out of the window automatically, according to the correspondent who originally described the arrangement in The New England Homestead. This device enables one man to stand on the ground and put a large number of baskets of grain out of sight in a very few minutes.

Conclusions on Spraying.

Summing up the results of the work of the past season at the Hatch experiment station, the following conclusions are drawn:

That the apple scab, pear leaf blight and cracking of the fruit, the peach and plum fruit rot, the plum leaf blight and plum black wart, the grape powdery mildew and black rot, the raspberry anthracnose and the potato leaf blight and rot may be wholly or largely prevented when the solutions of copper are properly applied.

That by the combined use of the Bordeaux mixture and paris green the above fungi are prevented, the tent caterpillars and cankerworms are killed, and the injury to the apple and pear from the codling moth, and to the plum and peach by the plum curculio, may be largely prevented.

That if the spores of the plum wart become established in the tree the copper solutions do not stop its growth, but that by painting with "kerosene paste" they are destroyed at once.

That the peach foliage is very susceptible to injury from copper solutions, and that these solutions must be applied at from one-third to one-fourth the strength used upon the apple and pear.

Dwarf Limas.

Among the dwarf limas—Henderson's, Burpee's and Dreer's—we give a decided preference this year to Burpee's. The plants are a couple of feet in diameter, not over fifteen inches tall, all of the true bush form—that is, without any inclination to run to vine, as has been the case with occasional plants in preceding years. We counted on one plant thirty-five pods, the pods averaging nearly three seeds each of the largest size. Thorburn's kumerle strain and Dreer's bush are the same, or so nearly so that the one will answer for the other.—Rural New Yorker.

Protection from Cutworms.

Gardens and corn fields infested with cutworms should be burned over in the fall. Any land kept clean through the fall will be free from cutworms the next year. In the spring protect garden plants until the middle of June by means of old fruit cans set around them, advises The New England Homestead.

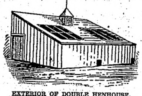
The total wheat crop of Canada this year is reported at 55,000,000 bushels, against 62,000,000 to 65,000,000 last year.

DOUBLE POULTRY HOUSE.

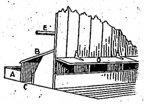
Designed for Two Flocks of Twelve Hens Each, but May Be Enlarged.

The house depicted in the cut was originally illustrated and described in The Farm and Fireside. It ought not to cost more than thirty dollars, and is intended for two flocks of a dozen hens each, but it may be lengthened if desired. It is sixteen feet long, eleven feet wide, eight feet high in front and four feet at the rear.

It is made of inch boards, battened on the outside and lined with tarred felt inside. The roof is of felt, covered with coal tar or cement paint. A ventilator is in the center. The sashes are four feet square. A passage way runs along the north side, three feet wide, and a lath fence divides the house into two apartments. The door may be in the center, in front, for two apartments, but for a long house it should be at the end.



EXTERIOR OF DOUBLE HENHOUSE.



INTERIOR VIEW OF HENHOUSE.

Fig. 2 shows the interior, A being the box to hold the droppings, twelve inches wide and six inches high. B is the board for collecting the droppings when the fowls are on the roost. D is the box containing the nest, the fowls entering at the opening shown at C, and E is the roost. The interior plan is intended for a long house, but may also be applied to one of only two apartments.

Pasteurized Cider.

Many improvements have been made in cider presses, and now M. Pasteur has discovered a vastly superior method of preparing cider after it comes from the press. By the improved method cider is rendered so pure and free from active germs of fermentation that it can be kept for years in a perfect state, even with a very low per cent. of alcohol. California Fruit Grower describes the process as follows: "The cider is taken fresh from the press or after fermentation in tanks, as may be desired. The scum is removed as long as it continues to rise to the surface or until fermentation has proceeded sufficiently far. It is then run through paper filters and is conducted to a coil of block tin, which is surrounded by hot water or steam, kept at a temperature of between 140 and 160 degs. F.

"From here the cider flows through the remaining portion of the coil, which is surrounded by cold water and is so arranged that all the heat is taken from the cider before it is conducted into the barrels in which it is to be stored. After a barrel has been filled great caution is exercised in excluding the air. The bung is driven tight and a coat of thick varnish is applied to the entire barrel. The cider will then by slow fermentation gather flavor and carbonic acid gas, and will soon be ripe enough for use. If wanted for immediate use the flatness in taste can be overcome by the introduction of liquid carbonic acid gas from a cylinder, before or after the cider has been drawn from the barrel, when it will be found that the natural flavor has been restored. Cider made in this way is simply the plain juice of the apple, without the introduction of drugs, gelatins or albuminous compounds of any kind, and it has all of the brilliancy, bouquet and flavor which are so much desired."

The Plague of Field Mice.

In Scotland, where the field mice have become such a plague that a commission of the department of agriculture is investigating the matter, the increase of mice is attributed to the killing of weasels and birds of prey by hunters.

The Stockman says that the same conclusions have been reached by intelligent farmers in many parts of this country. The states of Pennsylvania and Colorado offered a bounty for the heads of hawks and other birds of prey, and as a consequence most of them were killed off. Soon field mice, gophers and ground squirrels increased so fast that the farmers would gladly pay a bounty to the persons who would breed hawks and other large birds.

What to Do with Cornstalks.

If you have an open yard of wire the winds will sweep through the yard in winter, and the hens may not be as comfortable as desired. The cornstalks may be arranged on the north and west sides to serve as wind brakes, and can as easily be kept there as elsewhere, as well as serving to keep the hens warm and less exposed.—Orange County Farmer.

Farm Notes.

The time to feed cattle is whenever they are hungry.

Put a prickly halter on the calf that sucks his mates. It will soon break him of the habit.

Reports come of the success of American tobacco seed in Germany.

The American Florist advises to get rid of moles: "Knock off the rosin from a ball of potash, pulverize the potash, make openings in the runs, drop in a tablespoonful of the potash and cover the opening with a flat stone. I tried it and the moles disappeared within a few days. Ball potash is very caustic and must be handled with caution to avoid injury to the one using it."

IT is said Judge Ira B. Mills is to be appointed assistant attorney general. A very wise selection.

THE complete returns shows Feig's defeat by a few votes. But he made a truly gallant fight against great odds.

IT is now given out that Biela's comet, which was due here on the 27th inst., is not coming our way, but the comet seen by the astronomers is receding from the earth.

MRS. LEASE, of Kansas, declares she is in the race for U. S. senator from that state, and in order to keep up its notoriety for sending freaks to congress, Kansas should elect a female senator to cap the climax.

The Donnelly-Fish row is but the beginning of the end of the people's party in Minnesota—for that is all there ever was to it anyhow. The farmers alliance as a business organization may survive but even that is doubtful.

BRO. STEVENS, of the Warren Register, independent candidate for county attorney of Marshall County, was one of the good men who suffered defeat at the last election, We extend to him our heartfelt sympathy on this occasion, and wish him better luck next time.

THE Georgia legislature has passed resolutions calling on the incoming congress to carry into effect the provision of the democratic national platform for the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on state banks. The plank was put in the platform through the efforts of Hon. L. F. Garrard, a delegate from Georgia.

DONNELLY and Fish have had a falling out, each blaming the other for the result of the election. Fish has announced that his paper, the Great West, will be independent hereafter; and Donnelly has issued an appeal to people's party men to subscribe stock enough to establish another organ at the state capital.

Doc FISH and Donnelly have had a dickens of a row and Doc has been fired from the position of state lecturer of the alliance. Doc will now run an independent sheet devoted to his own peculiar ideas and Donnelly will—what, well Donnelly will do only time can tell for no fellow can find out one minute what Donnelly will do the next—it is doubtful if even Donnelly himself could tell if he wanted to.

IN North Dakota the fusionists have elected a lady—Mrs. Eisenhuth—as state superintendent of public instruction, and the question of her eligibility to hold the office is now being raised on the ground that while the state constitution allows women to hold school offices, the office of state superintendent is a state office and not a school office, and that although Mrs. Eisenhuth has good educational qualifications she has not got the necessary business ability to conduct this important branch of the state government.

THE striking workmen at Homestead have at last given in and declared the strike off. The strike lasted 144 days, and was one of the most disastrous and expensive ever enacted in this conutry. The strike at one time involved nearly 10,000 men, and the loss in wages will reach, it is said, in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. Then there is the immense loss to the firm, which cannot be estimated, but which conservative people estimate at least double the amount lost by the men in wages. To this can be added nearly $500,000 paid to the state troops, and the costs to the county of Allegheny for the riot, treason and other cases growing out of the strike. At least 35 deaths were directly or indirectly caused by the strike. Besides those killed in the battle of July 6th many soldiers contracted fever which resulted fatally, one soldier was shot accidently by a comrade, another was killed by the cars, one striker committed suicide, one drowned, several non-union men died from fever and several were killed in the mill, and one was murdered by another non-unionist. The attempted assassination of Chairman Frick, of the Carnegie campany, is also indirectly credited to the strike.

SHOWING THEIR DEMOCRACY.

There is no word in the English language sufficiently strong to apply to the miscreants who, on the night of the democratic demonstration in Indiana, desecrated the graves of Union soldiers in different counties in that state by daubing the headstones with red paint. It is supposed to be the work of a band of southern sympathizers called the Knights of the Golden Circle, which was revived during the campaign to work for the democratic ticket and particularly for the election of Adlai Stevenson—a Confederate sympathizer—who it is even hinted belonged to this order at one time. Emboldened by victory they resolved to commit some act that would show their old Confederate friends in the south that copperheadism was still alive in the north. As a result it was decided to slink into the cemeteries and desecrate the graves of the fallen Union soldiers.

Every grave was visited by trusty men beforehand and marked so that no mistake could be made. On the night of the ratification the Golden Circles gathered, and committees were sent forth to complete the outrage. It now appears that every soldier's grave at Clayton and Stilesville, in Hendricks county and at West Union, Munrovia, Mont Zion, Hall, Mont Pleasant, Poplar Grove and Wilbur, in Morgan county, was visited. In many instances valuable monuments were utterly ruined by the daubing. Over many of these graves the national emblem had been placed by living and loyal friends, and these flags were also smeared with paint. At Hall an elegant shaft placed at the grave of Capt. Smith by his widow has been so bedaubed that it cannot be cleaned. Feeling is most intense in Morgan county, and a reward of $1,000 has been offered for the detection and punishment of the culprits. It is learned that a number of prominent democrats who were at one time suspected of affiliating with the Knights of the Golden Circle are already spotted as having taken a hand in this outrage. The G. A. R. posts are lending all the aid in their power to the searching out and punishing of the men, and talk of railroading a car load of influential democrats to prison is heard. Not only G. A. R. men, but good citizens generally are loud in their condemnation since it has been learned, it is claimed, that the affair arose from the election of Stevenson, and not a mere desire to celebrate the democratic victory.

This act of vandalism only shows the hatered which still exists in the south towards the north, and shows the kind of material the democratic party of the south is composed of. And the southern wing of the democracy—as everybody knows—controls the democratic party of this nation.

If the southern democrats do not rebuke this outrage it will be a silent acquiescence in the deeds of the Knights of the Golden Circle.

"AND THINGS ARE NOT WHAT THEY SEEM."

On the face of the returns as they seem in the Seventh district, H. E. Boen is entitled to a certificate of election, but now comes Henry Feig, the republican candidate, with evidence of errors in the count sufficient to change the result, and demands a re-count.

'Backward, Turn Backward."

Nebraska State Journal Rep.—Backward, turn backward. O! time in your flight, give us a victory just for tonight; wipe from our features the torrent of tears, take up the slack in the rope of the years; turn back the clock till it reads '88, blot out the present unmerciful fate, give us some hope for this nation's concerns, change the returns, mister, change the returns. Backward, flow backward O; stream of the age, seasoned tonight with republican rage; blot from our vision stuffed prophets and crow, choke off democracy's bluster and blow; jerk from despair a few fragments of hope, "keep a good eye" as we roll down the slope; never mind now—it's to late—what a scoop! Bring us the soup mister, Bring us the soup.

Wonderful Development.

Mississippi Valley Lumberman; Everybody who is familiar with the map of Minneasota knows that nearly one-half the area of the state lies north of the Northern Pacific and that with the exception of the prairie district along the Red River of the North, where railroad lines have been built, paralleled and reparalleled that the northern part of the state is almost without railway lines. That is, the maps most familiar to the public shows this condition. But a wonderful development is going on in the northern part of the state. About all the railroad building that is being done is being done in that district. Some of these lines are built for logging railroads and some to bring out the recently discovered deposits of iron ore. Two lines are headed for the Red Lake reservation and are likely to tap it on the east before the reservation is fairly open. These lands will open besides pine and iron lands stretches of hardwood timber and an argicultural district which will some day be populous and prosperous. Indeed there is reason to believe that the time will come, and that soon, when the railroad lines now in process of construction will be vastly more profitable than the prairie lines in the Red river valley district. Railroad managers have fairly fought over territory there while neglecting a great area further east that is destined to furnish far more profitable business, if the experience with the timber country lines in Wisconsin may be taken as any criteron. And the lumbermen have been and are the vangard in this new railroad construction. The logging railroad is an eye opener to railroad men as well as lumbermen.

The Rejoicing Majority.

New York Press: Many more millions rejoice than mourn over the result of the election. Democrats have as sharers in their jubilation nine out of every ten foreigners the world over. Those who regret Tuesday's result comprise only persons who believe in placing American interests before those of foreigners, who believe in the utilization of American resources by and for Americans and who would keep the United States always in her proud place at the head of industrial nations. These may be, for the moment, in minority, but they remember that no great cause ever prospered without reverses, and they prepare to renew with increased vigor their defence of American interests as against those of foreign nations.

Elbow Lake and Knute Nelson.

St. Peter Tribune: It will be recollected that the democracy tried to make a big handle out of Knute Nelson chastising a disturber of his meeting at Elbow Lake. The better class of citizens there exhonorated Knute Nelson and a number of democrats who had not intended to vote for Knute for Governor, declared that after such disgraceful treatment of the Republican candidate they would vote for him for Governor, and they did, Elbow Lake is in Grant Co., and the following is the vote on governor:

Nelson	791
Lawler	303
Donnelly	194

Plurality for Nelson over Lawler 488. Over Donnelly 597. Majority over both 294.

Hurrah for Knute Nelson, the elected governor! He knew his rights and dared to maintain them,

WASHINGTON DEVASTATED.

Floods Causing Terrible Havoc in the Far Northwest.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 21.—Reports received from the districts visited by the recent storm show a far greater loss than was at first anticipated. At Sedro several lives were reported lost, and fatalities are reported in Skagit and Stillaguamish valleys from the floods. Mount Vernon, Fir, Laconner, Hamilton and other towns are under water four or more feet deep, and people are removing their effects to higher ground, fearing a still greater rise. The Skagit river is so full of logs and drift that navigation is suspended. Nearly a million feet of logs came down it Sunday, tearing out the pier of the Wadron bridge at Mount Vernon, snapping the piles off like frail weeds. The banks of the river are lined with people watching the mad torrent.

Levees Broken.

Several breaks have occurred in the levee and the valleys and towns are the scenes of desolation. The lower floors of the houses are covered with several feet of water, while the water in the streets is so high as to make pedestrianism almost impossible. In one place the break in the levee is half a mile long and six feet deep, and the torrent is rushing madly through the town of Fir. Beaver Marsh and the town of Laconner are also flooded, and the farmers are driving their stock to high ground. The damage to the farming district alone will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars. The telegraph lines are prostrated in many sections, and when communication has been restored

A Fearful Tale May Be Told.

Railroad washouts are reported from many sections of the country. In many places big landslides have washed out the roadbed for miles. At Samish Lake and Ricksham several hundred feet of track have been washed out and at the former place a bridge was carried away. Sunday a Seattle and Northern train ran into a floating bridge in the Skagit valley and the engine and a baggage car went into the river. The fireman was buried under the locomotive, and the engineer and baggageman only saved themselves by jumping and swimming ashore.

Word from the town of Stanwood says that that place is flooded, and that it was found necessary to abandon the lower floors of buildings owing to the high waters. Communication with the other districts is cut off except by steamer.

The jam in the Snohomish river at Snohomish has not yet been broken. Over 5,000,000 feet of logs are piled about the Great Northern Railroad company's bridge and great fears are entertained for its safety. Should it go it will take the large city and wagon bridge with it. The railroad has a large force of workmen endeavoring to break the jam. Two steamers, the Mamie and the Isabella, broke from their moorings and are in the middle of the jam. They will prove a total loss.

AWFUL TRAGEDY

RESULTS FROM A FRIENDLY GAME NEAR FRAZEE, MINN.

Farmer Van Sickler Kills His Wife and Himself and Fatally Wounds a Guest. An Insane Chicagoan Kills Two People and Seriously Injures Three Others.

FRAZEE, Minn., Nov. 21.—I. L. Van Sickler, a Silver Leaf farmer, quarreled with his wife and a friend Saturday night over a game of cards. He procured a Winchester rifle and shot her twice through the body, one ball passing through the heart, killing her instantly. He then turned the weapon on himself and sent a bullet through his lungs. Reversing his weapon again, he shot F. C. Brown, of Fargo, through the hips.

Coroner Hansen and Dr. Hoyt, of Detroit, were notified and went at once to the scene, and found that Van Sickler had placed the muzzle of the gun in his own mouth and blown the top of his head off. Brown is the son of F. G. Brown, deputy register of deeds at Fargo, and had been stopping with the Van Sickler family while hunting for the past few weeks. He is still alive, but, owing to weakness from loss of blood and exposure his recovery is considered impossible. At the time of the shooting all were more or less under the influence of liquor. The general opinion is that Van Sickler was jealous, as Mrs. Van Sickler had the reputation of being a woman of notoriously loose character.

TWO DEAD, THREE WOUNDED.

Horrible Work of an Insane Chicagoan Before Being Overpowered.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—The later annals of Chicago record no more horrible crime nor one accompanied by more sensational details than that which brought death into a two-story frame cottage in the northwestern part of this city during the forenoon. By the acts of a man who is said by some to be insane, a double murder was committed, three people wounded and the murderer narrowly escaped violence at the hands of thousands of citizens who live near the scene of the tragedy.

Herman Siegler, a German, lived with his wife and three children at the residence of his wife's parents, Henry and Caroline Siles, 723 North Paulina street. Early Sunday morning Siegler began making preparations for a hunting trip. Nothing unusual was noticed about his actions until about 8 o'clock when, gun in hand, he entered the parlor, where his wife and children were. One of the little ones saw him first and began to scream. Mrs. Siles, the mother-in-law, hurried into the room and tried to take the gun from him. He placed the barrel against her left breast and fired, killing her instantly. The crazy man then fired at his wife, several of the shot taking effect in her neck and breast. The noise down stairs attracted the attention of Mr. Siles and he descended into the hallway. As he stepped from the lower step Seigler met him. Again raising the gun, which he had previously reloaded, he fired both barrels at close range, tearing away a portion of the old man's head. By this time a crowd had gathered outside and as Officer Simonson came up Siegler appeared in the doorway. The people fell back, and as the officer drew his revolver he ordered Siegler to surrender. The latter's reply was a shot from his gun, but he shot high. Simonson returned the fire and Siegler staggered back with a bullet in his side. Before he was overpowered he succeeded in firing another shot, which slightly wounded the officer. As Siegler was being taken to the patrol wagon threats of violence were heard on every hand and a number of revolvers were drawn by citizens who were anxious to get hold of the murderer. Siegler was at last placed in the wagon and the horses whipped into a gallop. At the station he made a short, incoherent statement, indicative of insanity. He was afterwards taken to the hospital. The extent of his wounds is not known.

MURDER IN MILWAUKEE.

William R. Binder Kills His Wife, His Daughter and Then Himself.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 21.—William R. Binder, bookkeeper for the Liedersdorf Tobacco company, shot and killed his wife, his 7-year-old daughter and himself. The affair occurred at the home of the family, 876 Cambridge avenue.

Corbett Buys Real Estate.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—"Jim" Corbett has purchased six lots on Jerome avenue near High Bridge for $33,000. The property is located on the famous drive leading to the Morris Park race track. It the intention of the champion pugilist to erect an attractive road house on one of the lots and make it the headquarters for turfmen and road drivers. He says it is his ambition to be the wealthiest fighter in the world.

Execution Postponed.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 21.—A long petition from citizens of Kent county was favorably considered by Governor Brown during the day. The petition asks a postponement of the eight murderers of Dr. Hill who were to hang in Chestertown during Christmas week. The governor changed the date of execution to Jan. 13.

No Outbreak Threatened.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The Indian bureau has received a telegram from Agent Ashley, of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency, stating that there was no threatened outbreak or destitution among these Indians as reported from Guthrie in a recent dispatch, charging the government responsible because it withheld the money of the Indians and were short on their rations. This story was also denied a statement made a few days ago by Indian Commissioner Morgan.

Baldwin's plurality over Searle in the Sixth district is now placed at 265.

Seven cars of wheat and a caboose were destroyed by fire at Eden Valley last week.

The Red Wing Brewing company has been organized at Red Wing with a capital of $50,000.

The St. Paul Plow works, situated at Gladstone, a suburb of St. Paul, were destroyed by fire Tuesday of last week, causing a total loss of over $300,000.

Two masked men entered the Bank of Woodstock the other evening at 8 p. m. and forced Cashier Perry and Assistant Craig to open the vault. The robbers took about $1,000 and departed.

Big iron works, to employ about 400 skilled workmen, are to be built in Minneapolis. Articles of incorporation were filed Thursday, and the plant is expected to be in operation by May. 15.

Minneapolis has broken the world's record this year in the production of lumber. Last year's lumber cut was 447,000,000 feet, and the cut for 1892 promises to be 50,000,000 feet ahead of that.

Mrs. Bridget Murtaugh, died in Blue Earth county a few days ago at the age of 102. She left four children, twenty-three grand children, and twenty-six great grandchildren, the oldest of the fourth generation being 18 years.

The saw mills in the Duluth district cut 365,000,000 feet this year, an increase of 90,000,000 over last year. Fifty millions of this was shipped by the lake route. The probable cut this winter is estimated at 425,000,000 feet.

John Flynn, arrested at Red Wing for murder in the first degree for killing Charles Carlson and indicted for manslaughter in the second degree, has been found not guilty. His former good record and circumstances surrounding the case saved him.

Mrs. Fred Smith, an elderly German lady, while attempting to cross the railroad track at Sleepy Eye, was struck by an east bound passenger train and instantly killed. The body was hurled some fifty feet, some pieces of bone being driven into the ties.

The semi-annual meeting of the Minnesota conference of the Augustana synod of the Swedish Lutheran church met last week at Cokato. Over one hundred ministers, representing 255 congregations of the state, the Dakotas and part of Wisconsin, were in attendance.

Louis Herseberg, of Decorah, Ia., township, was the victim of highway robbery on his return from the Democratic ratification at Mankato. A stranger asked for a ride, and while in a lonely spot struck Mr. Herseberg with a plow iron on the head, cutting one ear and otherwise bruising him. He fell insensible to the ground, where he lay some time, after which he managed to get back to Mankato, where he is being cared for. Neither robber nor team has been heard from.

The State Historical society has determined to take steps toward securing a building of its own, and will ask the legislature this winter to pass an appropriation for this purpose. At the last meeting of the society it was decided to have President Ramsey appoint a committee to draft a bill and take all steps necessary to procure from the legislature money enough to erect a building. The present cramped quarters of the society have long been inadequate, and of late the library has increased to such an extent that there is barely room to move about between the rows of book cases.

FOR A NEW CAPITOL.

Minnesota's Commissioners Favor One Similar to the Iowa Building.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 21.—The state capitol commission met Tuesday at the Merchants. All the members were present. The commission has been spoken of as a "removal commission," but there has been nothing as yet in their deliberations or actions which seems to contemplate any removal of the state capitol, unless it should be the slight change within St. Paul made necessary to secure more ground. The commission had set the limit of cost of a new capitol at $3,000,000 as the highest, and $2,000,000 as the lowest figure.

The plan of building was discussed and sentiment favored one similar to the Iowa capitol. This is supposed to have cost $2,600,000, and is described to the commission as about the size and shape to fit the Minnesota commonwealth. Chairman McMillan suggested that a bill be drawn for presentation in the legislature, and he and Senator Dean were appointed to draft the measure. The commission went into executive session to discuss certain features of the bill. It was subsequently decided that the commission visit Des Moines in a body on Nov. 29 to inspect the state capitol there.

Fatal Fire at Willmar.

WILLMAR, Minn., Nov. 22.—The Merchants hotel was burned during the morning. The fire started in the engine room in the basement at 6 o'clock a. m. and before the alarm had been responded to the flames had gained entrance to the south half of the third floor and the building seemed doomed, but in two hours the fire was under control. The hotel was full of guests and all escaped safely except West Howe, one of the oldest and most trusted engineers of the Great Northern railway, who lost his life. He was picked up dead a few feet from his room.

Duluth's Big Cut.

DULUTH, Nov. 22.—The saw mills in the Duluth district cut 365,000,000 feet this year, an increase of 90,000,000 over last year. Fifty millions of this was shipped by the lake route. The probable cut this winter is estimated at 425,000,000 feet.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

How the Necessary Money Is Raised and Handled for Carrying Elections.

During a political campaign the first and in most cases the chief source of revenue is the assessment of candidates. The amount of these assessments varies in different localities and under different circumstances. A common assessment in Illinois, for example, in districts that are not considered especially doubtful in ordinary elections, is 5 per cent. of the annual salary, and it is expected that all candidates, unless there is some special reason for exception, will pay this assessment. However, it not infrequently happens that the most valuable candidate for the party is a poor man, who is unable to pay the regular assessment. In that case, the committee, taking all the circumstances into account, ask him to pay what seems reasonable, or he may be even entirely exempted from assessment, as in the case of a crippled candidate for county recorder in Indiana in 1890. A wealthy candidate, who can well afford to pay more, is sometimes assessed a lump sum without any especial reference to the salary that he is to receive if elected.

In national elections local county committees expect to receive money also from the national committee, usually through the hands of the state committee. In the campaign of 1888 the Republican committee in one county of Indiana received $800 from the state committee, which they supposed, as a matter of course, came from the national committee.

In the campaign of 1880, in that same state, the two leading county managers of one of the parties went to Indianapolis and met there a representative from the national committee. They went to his room in the hotel to talk with him regarding funds. When he asked their needs it was replied that they did not come to beg money from the national committee, but that their county stood ready to match dollar for dollar whatever sum he was willing to give them. "You're the kind of men I have been wanting to see," replied the gratified representative from New York. "You can have as much money as you want; help yourselves." He took down two valises, and threw them open, showing them packed full of bills. One of the most astute of New York political managers is of the opinion that while they doubtless took what they needed they failed to keep their promise to match the sum "dollar for dollar" from their own county; but they did keep their word.

Another source of revenue, and one that is much larger than we should expect, if we did not consider the great enthusiasm that a close campaign arouses, is voluntary contributions. I am not speaking here of the large sums that are raised by national committees from wealthy men, especially from those who feel that they have much at stake in national legislation, but the amount that is contributed to county and city committees in local campaigns. In the campaign of 1888, in the same county that received $800 from the national committee, one little city of 4,000 inhabitants raised $1,200 a day or two before the election, after the assessments had been collected. The money was given voluntarily by enthusiastic men. In that campaign, in that county, some $7,000 was spent by one party alone.—Professor Jenks in Century.

An Apple Tree's Roots.

For the purpose of erecting a suitable monument in honor of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island, his private burying ground was searched for himself and wife. It was found that everything had passed into oblivion. The shape of the coffins could be traced only by the carbonaceous matter. The rusted hinges and nails and a round wooden knot remained in one grave, while a single knot of braided hair was found in the other.

Near the graves stood an apple tree, from which fruit had been gathered each year and eaten. This had sent down two main roots into the very presence of the coffined dead. The larger root, pushing its way to the precise spot occupied by the skull of Roger Williams, had made a turn as if passing around it, and followed the direction of the backbone to the hips. Here it divided into two branches, sending one along each leg to the heel, where both turned upward toward the toes. One of these roots formed a slight crook at the knees, which made the whole bear a striking resemblance to the human form. —New York World.

Making Ghost Photographs.

Photographers, and especially amateurs, have given much attention to the production of spirit photographs, and many suggestions have been made as to the best mode of securing effective pictures. A prominent operator states that he has obtained excellent results by setting up the camera and focus in the ordinary way on a person wrapped in a sheet or other suitable covering and placing the clothed spirits lightly out of focus against a dark background, giving a short exposure and then capping the lens. If the real sitter is then placed in the center of the focusing screen and given an ordinary exposure a materialized angel will be visible on the development of the photo.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Increase of Voting Population.

Between 1880 and 1890 the eligible voting population in the United States increased 32 per cent. The ratio of growth was smallest in Maine and Vermont, and largest in Nebraska, Minnesota, Oregon, Florida, Kansas and the new states. Florida increased more largely than any one of the southern states, and New Jersey more largely than any of the northern states east of the Mississippi.—New York Sun.

The German Birth Rate.

It is asserted that the proportionate number of births in Russia is nearly double that of France, while the German population increases faster than that of any other country.—Chambers' Journal.

General Isaac J. Wistar, president of the Academy of Natural Sciences, at Philadelphia, has confirmed the report that Secretary Tracy had granted Lieutenant Peary three years' absence. The second expedition to the arctic regions will be made under the academy auspices.

General James G. Field, Populist candidate for the vice presidency, has written a letter to General Weaver, in which he reviews the result of the late election. The fact that 1,000,000 votes were polled for the People's party ticket in the face of certain defeat he regards as a great victory for the cause.

A Runaway Train.

SPENCER, Ia., Nov. 22.—A caboose and fifteen cars left standing on the main track of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad at Hartley ran away, meeting the regular freight west at Everly. The bridge gang of five men were asleep in the caboose when the engine split the caboose wide open and all the occupants were badly hurt. Doty Stevens, one of the injured, died at 1 o'clock and all the others will probably recover.

After Their Pastor.

HAZELTON, Pa., Nov. 2.—The trustees of the Hungarian Catholic church of this city appeared before Alderman German and caused a warrant to be issued against Rev. Father Kossolka, charging him with embezzlement. Rev. Kossolka is widely known in Hungarian circles and the report that he had absconded created a sensation. It is believed he has sailed for Bremen.

Circus Train Wrecked.

MOBILE, Nov. 2.—A special train carrying McVane & Shields' 10-cent circus from Mount Vernon, Ala., to Mobile, over the Mobile and Birmingham railroad, was wrecked on a curve four miles from Mobile by a car jumping the track. Several employes were hurt, three seriously.

STUDENTS ON STRIKE.

Twelve Hundred Lady Scholars at the Ohio State University Walk Out.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 21.—Twelve hundred women students of the state university struck at noon and left the institution. The cause of this action was the failure of President Scott to comply with requests for him to ameliorate the sanitary condition of their reception, study and lunch rooms which the physiological and zoological laboratories adjoin. A careless janitor permitted these laboratories to get into such a condition as to emit odors. President Scott expects to have the matters complained of remedied in a day or two and says the young ladies will return then.

Advised to Become Reconciled.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company says the Leipsiger Neuste Nachrichten states that while hunting with the emperor, the king of Saxony advised him to become reconciled with Bismarck and pointed out to him the dangers of the military bill.

Bad Blaze at Lamberton.

LAMBERTON, Minn., Nov. 14.—A destructive fire wiped out all of the business part of Lamberton on Front street. The loss will amount to about $20,000, with but little insurance. The fire is thought to have been set in the barn of John Haas.

News has been received at Winona of the death of Miss Sarah H. Strong, of that city, at Rioja, Argentine Republic, S. A. Miss Strong was a member of the first graduating class of the Winona state normal school in 1866, subsequently teaching school at Winona for fifteen years. In 1882 she accepted the position of supervisor of the normal department at Parana, Argentine Republic, where she continued up to the time of her death.

Mr. Dickinson took ex-Governor Campbell off the stump in the East and sent him back among the Buckeyes. The Democrats had a clear field, because Mr. Hahn, of the Republican national committee, had scattered Secretary Charles Foster, Governor McKinley, Senator Sherman and ex-Governor Foraker to other states.

A COLORED BOY CHOIR.

A Very Melodious One in Surplices at St. Philip's Church.

New York boasts of the largest surpliced colored boy choir in the United States, and, so far as is known, in the world. Such choirs are not numerous, and are to be found only in large cities. There are two in New York—one belonging to a Roman Catholic and the other to a Protestant Episcopal church. The latter is the one here meant, and as the music of the Episcopal is so different from that of the Roman Catholic church no comparison between the two can be drawn.

St. Philip's church in West Twenty-fifth street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, is one of the oldest colored congregations in America. The present building is an ordinary affair of brick and was once used by Methodists. Up to a few months ago the music at St. Philip's was furnished by an ordinary mixed choir of colored singers. Some months before Easter it was decided to change to a boy choir, such as are to be found in Trinity, St. Agnes', St. Andrews' and other more or less "high" churches in the city. The present organist, Mr. E. B. Kinney, was engaged to organize the choir, and the first services under the new order of things were heard on Easter Sunday. Mr. Kinney, however, found the task of organization a difficult one. He discovered that, so far as the constant desire to have fun and play pranks with one another was concerned, there was not much difference between colored and white boys. And as the choir consisted of thirty boys, in addition to twenty men, he had to keep his eyes open. In time the youngsters began to submit fairly well to discipline and are now quite tractable. Of course there was no trouble with the men.

The colored race is essentially musical, both in ear and voice, and this fact has caused the choir of St. Philip's to be reckoned among the best boy choirs in the city. Once the youngsters are interested they enter upon the work with an earnestness that would put many a white boy to the blush. In the choir there are several remarkably good soprano voices. Two little colored chaps, Prentice Hutchinson and Howard Braxton, are regarded as especially fine, and to them most of the solos are given. The ages of the boys range from nine to sixteen years.

Mr. Kinney says that as far as he knows he is the only white person connected with the church, though the rector, the Rev. H. C. Bishop, is frequently assisted by white ministers. St. Philip's church is interesting for other things than its choir. It has a very valuable chalice cup, made of gold, which has been insured for $4,000. It is studded with diamonds, pearls, rubies and other precious stones. There is a legend that two of the diamonds, each worth $700, were found in the bottom of a trunk belonging to one of the women members of the church and were given to adorn the chalice cup. The altar is a handsome one and was presented by Dr. Ray, a colored physician of some note in this city. The organ is small, but very sweet in tone.—New York World.

An Anecdote of Benjamin West.

When Benjamin West, the great American artist—born in Pennsylvania in 1738—was a little boy, one of his school fellows tempted him to a holiday from trap and ball by promising him a ride to a neighboring plantation. "Here is the horse bridled and saddled," said his friend, "so come get up behind me." "Behind you!" cried Benjamin. "I will sit behind nobody." "Oh, very well," replied the other, "I will ride behind you; so mount." He mounted accordingly, and away they rode. "This is the last ride I shall have for some time," said his companion. "Tomorrow I am to be apprenticed to a tailor." "A tailor!" exclaimed Benjamin; "you will surely never be a tailor!" "Indeed I shall," continued the boy; "it is a very good trade. What do you intend to be, Benjamin?" "A painter." "What sort of a trade is that?" "A painter," said the Quaker boy proudly, "is the companion of kings and emperors." "Now you must be surely mad," said the embryonic clothier; "there are neither kings nor emperors in America." "Aye," said young West, "but there are plenty in other parts of the world. And do you really intend to be a tailor?" "Indeed I do. "Then you may ride alone," cried the future president of the National Academy of Great Britain. "I will not ride with any one willing to be a tailor." —New York Press.

Sweet Simplicity.

A party of guests from a well known New Hampshire hotel deserted the piazzas and wandered down into the meadows to view the splendors of a mountain sunset.

In the party were Miss B——, a fascinating girl of sweet and twenty, her mother and Professor K——, an old sojourner and authority on all points of interest in the vicinity.

"I should love to climb Mount Tecumseh. Have you ever tried it, professor?" inquired Miss B——.

"Yes," replied the oracle of West C——; "it's a tough tramp—over five miles to the summit."

"Oh, mamma," exclaimed Miss B—— enthusiastically. Mount Tecumseh is over five miles high!"—Kate Field's Washington.

Gold.

The very sound of the word has something fascinating about it. For these yellow lumps wars have been fought, men have endured the most terrible hardships, and risked life in thousand ways. For it, men and women have periled and lost peace and honor. It almost has moral qualities. Its physical qualities are well worth notice, too. It is the only metal in all Nature's workshop which has a yellow color. It is not oxidized by the atmosphere—in common language, it will not rust. Its ductility is wonderful. A single grain can be beaten into a sheet that will cover fifty-six square inches of space, and the sheets are so thin that 202,000 of them make a pile only one inch high. An ounce of gold, forming the covering of a silver wire, has been drawn out to a length of thirteen hundred miles. It has been found, in quantity sufficient to pay for mining, in thirty states and territories of the Union, and the value of the product from 1793 to 1890 was one billion dollars. One of the best uses of gold is as money; and one of the best uses of money is to purchase tickets for a journey via the Burlington route. Your home agent will be glad to sell them—or, if he cannot supply you, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Something new for Chicago Travel.

The Bulletin believes in getting credit where credit is due, and it wishes, therefore, to mention the magnificent train service that "The North-Western Line" is giving the people of the Northwest. It is no ex-aggeration to say that probably in the United States the train service of this line between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago is not surpassed. The recent addition of private compartment cars and Buffet-Smoking Library cars to the equipment of the North-Western limited, is a great advance and provides the public with a service that excels the state room accommodations on Eastern roads, for which a large excess fare is taken, while the North-Western Line provides these superior accommodations without extra charge. The Bulletin desires to make this voluntary mention believing that it is deserved. The public will certainly appreciate the improvements referred to.—Commercial Bulletin, Minneapolis.

BIG STRIKE OVER.

LOCKED OUT MEN AT HOMESTEAD GIVE UP THE STRUGGLE.

After a Bitter Fight of Nearly Five Months the Strikers Acknowledge Defeat—One of the Greatest Labor Demonstrations in the Country's History Ended.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 21.—The great Homestead strike or lockout was brought to an end during the morning at a meeting at the rink which was presided over by the chairman of the strikers' advisory board. Secretary Killgallen, Vice President Carlter and Treasurer Madden, national officers of the Amalgamated association, were present. The lockout had reached its 144th day. Its history is known all the world over. The vote opened the steel works to the Amalgamated association. The meeting was a red hot one all the way through and at one time it looked as if the burgess would have to assert his authority to prevent serious conflict. Charges and counter charges were the order of the day.

Now that the struggle is over the men are not backward about expressing their opinions of the men who have posed as leaders, confidently promising victory when they knew for a certainty that the battle was hopeless. According to Superintendent Wood, of the Homestead works, not more than 800 or 900 of the total number of old employes will be able to secure employment. Before the break of last Thursday there were left in Homestead about 2,800 of the original 3,800 men who were locked out on the 25th day of June.

FINAL SESSION.

The Farmers' Alliance Convention Closes at Memphis

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 18.—The closing session of the Alliance convention was held at 9 o'clock, when the newly elected officers were installed in the presence of about one half the delegates. The others were so much disgusted at the result of the contest for the offices that they remained away from the hall. A number of these delegates insist that as soon as they return to their homes and announce the result of the action of the convention to their state alliances that a withdrawal from the national body will at once take place and a new order will be formed. The announcement of the election of Loucks was the last straw with his opponents and they at once began action. A room was secured at the Gayose hotel where they prepared a manifesto denouncing in unmeasured terms the unjust warfare that had been waged upon C. M. McCune by partisan leaders. They also deplored the fact that persons who were not members of the order have by their access to the secret actions of the body sought to degrade it in the public mind. The manifesto is signed by all the Southern delegates, headed by Ben Terryll, of Texas.

The Alliance convention was finished when the officers were installed and the delegates began leaving for home. Some of the northern delegates will take a trip south before returning home.

POWDERLY RE-ELECTED.

He Is Again Chosen Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 21.—At Monday's session of the Knights of Labor convention, after several minor matters had been disposed of, Mr. Powderly was placed in nomination for grand master workman. He told the convention he did not wish a re-election and begged them to chose another grand master. The count showed 102 votes for Mr. Powderly and 6 scattering. Hugh Cavanaugh was elected general worthy foreman by a practically unanimous vote. John W. Hayes was elected in the same manner. The election of the executive board resulted in the selection of A. W. Wright, John D. Collins, J. D. Davis and Morgan Maguire, the first three being re-elected. The report of the committee on schedules and legislation will be the next business before the convention.

IOWANS SELECTED.

Two Residents of the Hawkeye State Appointed to Offices of Trust.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The president has made the following appointments:

William M. Stone, Knoxville, Ia., commissioner of the general land office, vice Thomas H. Carter, resigned; Mr. Stone has been acting commissioner since Mr. Carter left the office; John H. Gear, of Burlington, Ia., assistant secretary of the treasury, vice Lorenzo Crounze, resigned; G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, collector of internal revenue for the Twenty-third district of Pennsylvania.

After Sawyer's Seat.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 20.—John L. Mitchell seems to be in the lead in the contest for Philetus Sawyer's seat in the United States senate. It is now claimed that Mitchell has fifty-five votes in the legislature, while thirty-nine are all that are needed. Back of this John L. Mitchell has the solid Milwaukee delegation. Mr. Mitchell was a Trojan in the recent campaign. He gave $6,000 to the fire sufferers in behalf of the Democracy, and he gave $25,000 to the national cause. John H. Knight is "not in it" so far as Milwaukee county goes, and General Bragg is not much better off. "It is $100 to $60 that Mitchell gets it," said a sporting man, and that about sizes up the situation.

Cholera Shows Itself Again.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 21.—Cholera is again showing itself in Belgium. There have been two deaths from the disease in this city, and several cases are reported in Bruges and Mons.

UNCLE JERRY'S ANNUAL.

Report of Secretary Rusk of the Department of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Secretary Rusk has sought to make his fourth and last annual report as head of department of agriculture a valuable document and has grouped together many interesting facts to show what a great agricultural people we are and what a proper thing it was to make the prime commissioner of agriculture a cabinet officer. He says we sent abroad last year two hundred million dollars of products more than we had to import from foreign nations, and 80 per cent. of these products were agricultural.

He claims some credit for that because he shows an increase of 40,000,000 pounds weight of pork sent to countries which formerly excluded American pork and 40,000,000 dollars value increase in our exports of live cattle. All this comes from the increased precautions to secure healthfulness of American food products. The regulations offered for the prevention of Texas fever alone have saved cattle growers more than three times the cost of running the whole department. And as to the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia the secretary grows emphatic and eloquent, notwithstanding the assertions to the contrary of wicked and prejudiced London newspapers.

He explains why our wheat did not realize the big hopes raised by the short crops in various European countries in 1891 by saying that the anticipation of enhanced prices failed to take into account the changed conditions now surrounding the production and marketing of the worlds' wheat crop. Taking the world throughout the fat crops more than equaled the lean crops of 1891, so that there was actually more wheat grown in that year than in 1890.

Secretary Rusk throws cold water on the rain makers. The experiments are being loyally made as congress directed, but the facts in his possession do not justify the anticipations formed by the believers in this method of artificial rainmaking.

As his last word, the secretary expresses his profound appreciation of the cordial sympathy and broad intelligence with which the president has uniformally, throughout his administration, heeded the needs of agriculture.

AN IMMENSE AMOUNT.

Congress Will Be Asked to Appropriate $180,000,000 for Pensions Next Year.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—There appears to be more than usual interest attached to the forthcoming annual report of the commissioner of pensions. It has been pretty well understood for some time past that the estimates for the next fiscal year would show a large increase over any previous year. This expectation was based on the fact of the large issue of pensions during the year consequent upon recent pension legislation, which admitted to a pensionable status a very large number of soldiers who were not pensionable under the former laws. In a few days the report of General Raum will be completed. The statements have been made that the amount that will be required for pensions during the next fiscal year will nearly reach the enormous sum of $200,000,000. The work of compiling the figures is sufficiently advanced to show that this estimate is in excess of the actual requirements. Since the passage of the disability bill there has been a rapid increase in the amount needed to pay the pensions. For the year 1890-'91 the total appropriation on account of pensions was about $129,000,000. Last year there was an increase to $144,000,000. But as General Raum will state in his report, this amount fell short of the actual demands by about $18,000,000, so that there is a deficiency of that amount. Congress will be asked to make an appropriation of about $180,000,000 for the coming fiscal year, about $18,000,000 of which is an anticipation of an increase of that amount over the actual expenditures of the last year. It is the judgment of General Raum that while this amount is likely to be increased the next year or two, the maximum limits are nearly reached. It is argued that the great bulk of the pension appropriation at present is used in making first payments and carrying arrears, and, therefore, as soon as the great rush of applications under the disability act is over a rapid decline in first payments will occur. It is understood that the first payments last year aggregated over $50,000,000, which covered the back pay in the 311,000 cases allowed.

Will Race for a $10,000 Purse.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 21.—Bicyclist W. C. Sanger, of this city, has accepted Zimmerman's challenge to race for a $10,000 purse and has deposited $500 with The Sentinel to cover the $500 forfeit placed by Zimmerman with The Sporting Life several weeks ago. Sanger expresses an intention to bring matters to a speedy issue and is anxious to meet Zimmerman as soon as possible after the articles are signed. He is in excellent condition and his friends are confident of his ability to win.

A Third Party Machine.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 21.—Dr. C. W. Macune, editor of The National Economist, who was recently defeated for the presidency of the Farmers' Alliance, predicts the total disruption of that body if, at the next national conference, the Southern delegates do not attend. He said: "The Alliance is now simply a party machine and will continue so for at least one year."

Met Democratic Leaders.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Senator David B. Hill met a number of local Democratic leaders at the Hotel Normandie during the day. It is understood that the principal subject discussed was the election of Edward Murphy, Jr., to succeed Senator Hiscock in the United States senate.

One Woman's Life Story.

I am twenty-two years old and have been married four years. My husband was visiting at my home (which was in England) at the time of my birth, therefore was acquainted with me from earliest infancy. As we grew up we were frequently thrown into each other's society, but when he arrived at the age of seventeen and I was twelve we were parted, my husband coming to America, where he staid five years, at the expiration of which time we were to be married; but unfortunately he lost all his money in Liverpool, and on arrival at my home was penniless. Consequently we could not be married. My husband returned to this country to work for another year to earn enough money to pay my passage over, as we were entirely dependent on our own exertions.

At the end of twelve months he again started for England, but had to return again on account of a collision. Finally he arrived in England, where we were married a short time after and sailed for New York. As soon as we landed I was taken very sick, was taken to a hospital and went under a dangerous operation, which cost every cent of money we had in the world. At last I got better, we hired a couple of rooms, my husband succeeded in getting work, and although we are very poor we are very happy. I am the proud mother of two children.—Cor. New York Recorder.

What One Man Saw in One Day.

"I saw three very curious things yesterday; remarkable, they were. Coming in on a suburban train I sat down behind a women as black as ink. She was a full blooded negro, and her hair was as straight as yours or mine and as soft as velvet. I don't think there is another such case in the world.

"Walking up Broadway later on I saw an electric wire catch fire and burn in twain, the pieces falling to the ground. There were no cross wires nor any wire nor anything within ten feet of it when it caught." He rested awhile.

"Say! Ahem! When I was eating supper last night I found a worm—a black, shaggy worm an inch long—in a fresh egg. You see I have my eggs served to me in the shell and eat them with a spoon from the shell. As I dug down into the yolk of one brought me at a fashionable restaurant I saw something black in the center, and pulling it out discovered what I have told you. The egg was sound as a dollar. The way I figure it out is that an old hen swallowed a worm just before the egg began to form and the worm got tangled up in the machinery and got stuck. Well, I must be going. Good day."—St. Louis Republic.

Caste Broken Down by Street Cars.

Street cars in Bombay are mostly of American manufacture, and the promoters of the street car lines are Americans. When it was proposed, not many years ago, to start such lines Europeans prophesied their failure upon the ground that such common public conveyances could not be profitable in a caste ruled community. It was believed that the high caste man, who will not eat or drink from the vessel used by a low caste man, would refuse to ride in a public conveyance beside his humble brother.

In spite of these doleful prophecies the railways were built and equipped, and lo! the high caste man complacently pays his fare and rides untroubled by the side of any sort of man. The cheapness and convenience of the street cars were too much for even the hard and fast rules of caste.—Chicago Tribune.

Books with Uncut Leaves.

A book, the leaves of which are uncut, possesses no value of an intrinsic character beyond one that is cut, but really less. For that matter, if it is to remain uncut, it is as valueless as it is useless. There is a class of book collectors, however, who place a premium upon books with uncut leaves, and so commend them in their advertisements and circulars. There are persons who load certain shelves in their libraries with uncut books. Of course they are not for use and are not used, and are valueless except for keeping.—Brooklyn Eagle.

How Fishes Multiply.

Piscatory authorities of the highest standard tell us that were it not for nature's grand "evening up" provisions, the fishes of the seas would multiply so rapidly that within three short years they would fill the waters to such an extent that there would be no room for them to swim. This will hardly be disputed when it is known that a single female cod will lay 45,000,000 eggs in a single season.—St. Louis Republic.

Honeymoon Cookery.

"And so my little wife cooked this all herself? What does she call it?"

"Well, I started it for bread, but after it came out of the oven I concluded I'd better put sauce on it and call it pudding."—Exchange.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Once more the serene spirit of Thanksgiving fills the air and gives the yearning poet an appetite for roast turkey that cannot be appeased with baked beans, and freights him with a gilt edged joy that sings itself into pleasant dreams in his weary soul and shows in his countenance like the mourning band on a white high hat.

When we go forth to commune with nature at this delightful season of the year, when the petulant quail chants his intermittent "bob whites" that bore holes in the sweet empurpled dusk, we are pleased beyond measure. And this subtle pleasure that possesses us and wins our soul with its ineffable sweetness is the anticipation of the large plateful of roast turkey that bursts into blossoms in our large soulful visions. No small boy ever looked forward to the circus with profounder feelings of blissful anticipation than we look forward to Thanksgiving day, with its blooming golcondas of turkey, plum pudding and pumpkin pie.

The gobbler struts about full of the gentle spirit of the season, little divining the reason why his owner tosses him corn and bits of meat with so generous a hand. Could he know the real motive of this generosity he would probably sigh for an antifat remedy or seek to reduce his avoirdupois by dieting. But as it is, he struts proudly forth and dances a jig and waltzes about to the sad, sweet music of the crisp curled leaves in the ripples of the vagrant zephyr.

The man who has no appetite on Thanksgiving day is only fortunate if he has no money with which to garnish his interior with the bird set apart for the celebration of this widely popular holiday. Yet there are men with souls so dead to the poetic sentiment of this day that when they are, so to speak, all money and appetite, they will slip into a restaurant and make a dinner on corned beef and cabbage or mutton pie, and try to persuade themselves that they have had a Thanksgiving dinner.

But how could one have a genuine Thanksgiving dinner in a restaurant anyhow? You might as well try to have a masquerade ball in a hall bedroom or a game of billiards on a yacht in a choppy sea. The only kind of Thanksgiving dinner that is really worthy of the name is the one that is enjoyed in the country in the old homestead in which there is a great open fireplace with a blazing fire sending forth sparks upon the rag carpet that is constructed of the clothing of the last three or four generations. In such a homestead you cannot help dreaming of Thanksgiving upon any gray day in autumn when the pumpkins lie around the field in which the corn is standing in rustling russet stacks. There is a great deal in an ordinary dull gold pumpkin to make a man with a sensitive intellect renew his happy youth, and to feel that his decayed hair and long lost teeth have been restored, when he dreams of the great thick pies his mother used to construct at that period of the year when serious thoughts of Thanksgiving were first entertained. And as he eats those pies over again in memory they taste sweeter than ever and revive the many games of shinney that made the autumns of his early life so full of joy as they were of poetry.

In renewing his acquaintance with that pumpkin pie which was always the dessert upon Thanksgiving day, he feels that it is Thanksgiving day. And as he sits at the table and watches the tall glass of celery glistening before him, and the old china fruit dish on the sideboard overflowing with grapes and apples and oranges, and the great plate glowing with cranberry sauce, he thinks Thanksgiving is as far ahead of the Fourth of July as a Roman hyacinth is ahead of a Bermuda onion in point of fragrance. And why shouldn't it be? There is certainly no other holiday that brims more beautifully with cheery sunshine. Because, while it is a holiday upon which we receive no presents, it is likewise a holiday upon which we are not taxed to offer any. And this certainly must be a great relief to the women who commence constructing tidies for poor relatives about the 1st of May to make their Christmas happy. Suppose they had to make pincushions and teacloths and clerical slippers to be presented on Thanksgiving day! Then indeed would women's work never be half done.

There is a long headed rich man down at Siasconset, Mass., who selects his Thanksgiving turkey about the 1st of May. He then places it in a barrel for a short time, and every day plays the banjo in the presence of the divine bird. He has learned that a turkey treated in this way will become so fond of its owner that it will follow him around. After the bird becomes familiar with a solo it will never fail to run to the person who plays it. This old fellow often sits on his piazza and plays for the purpose of entering into social relations with the selected bird, and when the latter comes up he feeds it upon English walnuts and other dainties that have a tendency to add to the rotundity of the turkey and fill out its various dimples and hollows. This is much cheaper than scattering walnuts to the flock which he intends to sell.

The turkey selected for the Thanksgiving feast seems like a prime minister in a minuet while strutting about to the melodies of the banjo. And so he grows fat on music and walnuts until a day or two before Thanksgiving, when he hears the banjo solo for the last time, for while its owner is playing the turkey ventures a bit too near, at which time it is gently tapped upon the head and knocked off its drumsticks. And then the old Siasconcetter prepares it for the feast of feasts, and after it has been duly disposed of the family falls into a gentle postprandial vision, in which they hear weird and tender melodies and at the same time see several pairs of turkey wishbones waltzing gracefully about on the Persian rug in a ghostly fashion to the mellow plunketty plunk of the banjo. And on the following day the tenderest souvenir of Thanksgiving—the wishbone—is hung on the library door, to be a constant reminder of the mellow raptures of the day. R. K. MUNKITTRICK.

Cause for Rejoicing.

"Dearest," she said, "do you realize that we have been engaged just one year this Thanksgiving? Only think, dear, suppose we were married now?"

"But we are not," he replied, "and my own darling, between you and me, we have a great deal to be thankful for."

OH, SHOUTIN'S MIGHTY SWEET.

Oh, shoutin's mighty sweet
When yer shout when yer meet,
An shek han's roun an say:
"Bless Gord fur de meetin!
Bless Gord fur de greetin!"
Shoutin comes mighty easy dat a-way.

But ter shout when yer part,
An ter shout f'om yo' heart,
When yer gwine far away, far away,
Wid a lettin go han's
An a-facin strange lan's,
Shoutin comes mighty hard such a day.

"Glory" sticks in yo' th'oat
At de whistle o' de boat,
Dat cuts lak a knife thoo yo' heart;
An "Hallelulah" breaks
At de raisin o' de stakes
Dat loosens up de ropes ter let 'er start.

But ef yer fix yo' eye
On de writin in de sky,
Whar de "goodbys" is all strucken out,
An read de prormus clair
Of another geth'rin there,
You kin say far'well, my brothers, with a shout.

Den shout, brothers, shout!
Oh, tell yo' vict'ry out,
How neither death nor partin kin undo yer;
Look fust at yo' loss,
But last at de cross,
Singin glory, glory, glory hallelulah!

—Ruth M. Stuart in Harper's Bazar.

Hard to Satisfy.

Some persons are hard to satisfy. The thing in hand is of little worth, but the object beyond reach seems all desirable.

A clergyman in Maine, who lives near the seacoast, narrates an occurrence which gave him a moment of disappointment, but which has also supplied him with a very good story to tell.

He had planned a beautiful drive for the benefit of a lady from the west who was visiting his family—a lady who had never seen the ocean. The route was chosen in such a way that not a glimpse of the sea would be had until, at a certain bend in the road, the party would come out upon a high open space, commanding a magnificent view of the broad Atlantic.

As the carriage came out upon the plateau the clergyman turned a beaming face on the lady, expecting from her an exclamation of delight; but instead of happiness on her countenance, he saw a look of longing.

"Oh," she said, with a sigh, "how I wish I could see the Pacific!"—Youth's Companion.

The Formation of Heat.

M. Lagrange has communicated to the Belgian academy a paper on the formation of bodies in the universe. In this paper he expresses the opinion that, before any expenditure of work, the quantity of heat of the universe was nil, that the temperature was gradually raised above absolute zero at the expense of work done by attraction, and hence the formation of solid bodies must have preceded that of liquids and gases; that, through the gradual condensation of matter and consequent enormous development of heat, the earth would attain, at least in the parts near the surface, the state of fluidity necessary to its form and geological characters; then, as the temperature gradually rose with gradual agglomeration of matter, a very dense atmosphere would form, with pressure diminishing outward, and in a more advanced phase, the temperature of this, after reaching a maximum, would gradually diminish, causing liquefaction or solidification of certain matters at first vaporous, while other solid bodies might remain suspended in the atmosphere.

Briefly, M. Lagrange, in elucidation of the basis of his original and remarkable theory, as thus set forth, declares that space is occupied by two substances, namely: One, attractive, which is matter properly so called, or material atoms; the other, repulsive, which occupies the interatomic space, and from which results between any two atoms a variable repulsion exercised at the surface of the latter.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Yawning Witnesses.

A few evenings ago half a dozen men were sitting out in front of the Capital hotel discussing various topics, when Judge Yost, of the supreme court, in telling an anecdote of a trial, remarked that the witness yawned and he knew he was lying.

"How did you know?" was asked.

"Well, sir, I have seen witnesses lie and not yawn, but I never knew one to yawn that he was not telling a lie."

Judge Sims, the member of the legislature from Trigg, remarked, "Yes, I always know a witness is lying when he yawns."

Senator Dave Smith said, "It is almost invariably the case."

Judge Wall, the senator from Mason, came up and corroborated the statements of the others, and just then Judge Brent, of the superior court, joined the group. "When a witness yawns he is telling a lie, and he knows it."

Several other lawyers were appealed to, and all bore out the statements made. None, however, could explain the phenomenon. Judge Yost was the only one who had a theory, and that was that when a fellow was swearing to a lie he could not face the music, and his embarrassment found expression in yawns.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Quinine by Proxy.

Not long since, said the drummer, I was down in one of the ague districts of Indiana, and in front of my customer's store I saw a native sitting on the horse block. He seemed to be suffering and I went to him.

"What's the matter?" I inquired.

"Nothin much, mister," he replied with a wan smile. "I'm jest a settin here in the sun shakin."

"Got the chills?"

"That's what, mister."

"Why don't you take something for them?"

"I do, mister. That is, Sary does. She takes all the quinine for the family. Sary's my wife."

That was a new form of woman's devotion, and I was somewhat surprised at its discovery.

"Thunderation, man," I exclaimed, "that won't help you any."

"I guess you're mistaken, mister," he said, with stolid confidence. "I've had the chills fer twenty-five years an they ain't killed me yit."—Detroit Free Press.

Seen in the Metropolis.

A refuse cart was close to the curb on Thirty-seventh street, between Madison and Fifth avenues, recently, while the driver, a healthy young Irishman, talked to a woman who had on each side a little chap dressed in sailor costume. Most passersby must have taken her for a nurse out with her charges from one of the fashionable houses near by. After two minutes' talk the woman lifted the lads one by one to the side of the rough driver, who had carefully spread a piece of stout paper over his cargo to protect the clothing of the children.

One lad, tucked close under the driver's arm, was permitted to hold the reins, while the other poked the staid horse with a short stick. The three drove off eastward, smiling, while the woman followed on the sidewalk. The children were the driver's own, and they were as well dressed as half the children native to the locality in which the scene occurred.—New York Sun.

A Young Child Wife.

The conversation had drifted to early marriages, and Allan Thompson, of Dubuque, said: "The youngest wife I ever knew lived at Fairview, Ia. Her maiden name was Ella Hotchkiss, and at the age of eleven she was married to a youth of eighteen, whose name I cannot now recall. I frequently saw her after her marriage playing with other children about the village, making mud pies, etc. About a year after the marriage a little daughter—a tiny thing weighing but three pounds—was born to the youthful couple. The ladies of the neighborhood then persuaded the child wife to don long dresses and quit jumping the rope in the street."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Whittier, the poet, it is reported, said to the doctors in attendance a day or two before his death, "You have done the best possible, and I thank you: but it is of no use—I am worn out."

Owing to his wife's continued illness A. D. Morris has decided to go out of the jewelry business in this city and offers his entire stock for sale at prices away down. Call early for choice. (28tf)

Will and Ed Cleary have secured positions as traveling salesmen for the McFadden-Mullen Co. manufacturers of fine confectionery, St. Paul, and will have Montana, Minnesota, North and South Dakota as their territory.

The work of repairing the damage caused by the fire in the McKinnon block has been commenced. In its present condition the hall cannot be used for dancing or public gatherings of any kind and it will require about three weeks for the repairs.

Mrs. Lumsden's lecture to ladies only on Friday evening of last week is said to have been well attended and a most excellent lecture, though the writer cannot vouch for that, being of the proscribed sex. So we will not attempt to tell what she said as we should be sure to get something wrong.

The members of Col. Cobham Post are cordially invited to meet at the Post room to-morrow evening for a series of socials for the coming winter. Let every comrade come armed with a nickel to help pay for the fuel consumed. Every old soldier, whether a member of the Post or not, is cordially invited to be present.

The Dalen office, over the Merchants' National bank was the scene of a lively fire early on Saturday morning. The fire was discovered a few minutes before six and lasted but a short time after the arrival of the department. The building was damaged to the extent of six or seven hundred dollars and considerable damage was caused in the bank by water. Losses all covered by insurance.

On Thursday evening Rev. O. H. Elmer pronounced the words that united for life Mr. A. Busterud and Miss Lorina Johnson. After the ceremony a social dance was given at the Crookston Commercial College rooms. The groom is tinner for Alderman & Sylvester and highly respected by all who know him. The happy pair will commence housekeeping in Mr. B's residence on Broadway.

Work on the new jail building, which was hindered by the non-arrival of a carload of stones, was again delayed by cold weather this week. Mr. Erdmann is a hustler and will push the work to completion as fast as the elements will permit. If he could have had his material shipped to him as fast as he required it, he would have been through by this time. Now the work must necessarily be slow, unless the clerk of the weather will bill us some warmer weather soon.

It is all right and proper for the boys to have their fun skating on the ice in the evenings, but the habit that some of them have of stealing water barrels and other barrels to burn, is reprehensible and should be stopped. The boys should learn to respect the property rights of others and the plea that "they are only boys" is no good excuse to offer for such conduct. They should be taught that stealing is stealing just the same whether the article stolen be worth two bits or hundreds of dollars, and they should not touch the property of others because it is not right to do so. The boy who does not respect the property rights of others is liable to grow up a thief and end his days in the State's prison, but the boy who acts from principle will never be in any danger of such a fate.

Soft easy shoes for tender feet, at The Fair.

Be sure to see what Sture can do for you before you purchase.

New millinery and new Japanese goods at Mrs. I. U. Jennings' millinery store.

A new invoice of picture frames just received at I. U. Jennings' furniture store, to be sold very cheap.

Buy where you can buy the cheapest. Saake's store is the place. All goods 20 per cent. cheaper than other dealers.

L. E. George and Otto Kankel, of Fertile, made this office a pleasant call on Saturday last.

Prof. Strawbridge is to be court stenographer when Judge Ives dons the ermine. The judge has made a very wise selection in this case.

Comrade Snyder came in from his wood lot on Saturday with two wagon loads of iron-wood poles. He has men at work cutting wood for the market and will soon be ready to ship.

Dennis Ryan, the man who built the famous Hotel Ryan in St. Paul spent the day in the city last Tuesday en route home from his farm in Kittson county.

Saake, the Robert street jeweler, has a full and complete stock to choose from, and can give as good bargains as can be had anywhere in the city. Try him.

Remember that A. Sture, in the opera house block is prepared to give great bargains for cash. A very little money buys stacks of goods of Sture. Try it once.

Do you know Herb carries a full stock of musical goods from a mouth organ to a guitar? Everything it that line you need he has and he invites you to call and look him over.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings can always be found at her old stand on Robert street ready to show you the latest and most approved styles of millinery and will sell at prices corresponding to the times.

Fontaine & Anglim are offering unheard of bargains in fall and winter clothing, as you will see by calling at their mammoth store and examining their stock. Anything you want at any price you want.

H. L. Baker, representing the type foundry of Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, St. Paul, was in the city on Monday talking type to the Journal outfit. Call in and order your job work done on our new faces.

If you need anything in the line of watches, clocks, silverware or jewelry of any kinds, call on A. D. Morris' at his jewelry store and take advantage of his great closing out sale. They go without regard to cost to close out. It will pay you to bear this in mind and call.

Frank Barnum who has been reporter on the Daily Times ever since that paper started, has severed connection with the Times and goes to Sauk Centre to run the Avalanche. Frank has made many warm friends in this neck of the woods during his stay here who will unite with the Journal in wishing him success where'er his lot in life may be cast.

Williams & Roberts intend to dispose of their entire stock of damaged goods within the next 30 days. These goods were only damaged by water and are practically as good as new. They have $16,000 worth of dry goods, clothing, underwear, boots, shoes, rubbers, etc., and will dispose of them regardless of cost. Opera block, Crookston, Minn.

It is no use denying it. Crops are poor and the price of wheat is too low. The question arises for every farmer how to make ends meet and have some money to spare. We have one suggestion to make. It is this "read Locken & Holmboe,s adds" or better still visit their store and see how far a dollar goes at that place.

J. N. Priester & Co. have put up an office on Main street next to the Germania hotel, and will handle coal and wood this winter. They have got quite a stock of wood on hand, and have secured an engine and saw and will saw the wood into stove lengths. They are also going to run a feed mill in connection with their wood yard.

The Sunk Opera Company, which is to appear here Friday, Nov. 25th, have over three hundred dollars subscribed already for their appearance here. This is the finest attration that the management of the opera house has so far been able to secure for our theater goers, and the effort to secure a large house should be encouraged, as the coming attraction is one of the best on the road. The prima donna of the company is Miss Marie Bell, who for some seasons has been almost the "star" of the Carleton Opera Company. Those desiring to subcribe can do so by calling at Tom Morris' jewelry store or the Fair. Those subcribing for tickets get the first choice of seats. Pribes $1 for any seat in the house excepting boxes.

Tom Morris finding his jewelry business growing beyond his ability to keep up with his orders, has engaged the services of Mr. A. Lanctot to help in the store. Leave orders with Tom.

Mrs. John McKinnon entertained a number of her lady friends at cinch on Thurday evening.

O. P. Johnson, the Thief River Falls merchant, was doing business in the city last Friday.

If you are curious to know how far a dollar will go in dry goods, go to Sture's, opera block.

M. M. Davis is preparing to move his family from his farm near Euclid to the city for the winter.

Bert Duntley's new cafe is a daisy. He has things fixed in elegant style and ought to do a big business.

If you have a farm or city property to sell, list with Red River Valley Loan and Investment company.

Jim Murray has resigned his position as time-keeper in the yards here to accept a better one in the general office.

Miss Maud Leguee returned last week from Euclid where she has just completed a five months term of school.

Herbert Newland has resigned his position as express manager on the north run to accept the position of time-keeper under McCabe in the yard in this city. This enables him to have all his nights at home—a privilege he is fully prepared to appreciate.

See A. D. Morris' ad and call at his store on Robert street for bargains in jewelry. He expects to leave Crookston about Nov. 15th, and will dispose of his stock regardless of cost. Now is the time to catch on while they go at any price.

The first real snow-storm of the winter occurred on Saturday night and Sunday. Old Boreas held high carnival all Sunday afternoon and night reminding us of the storms that we have read of recently all over Uncle Sam's domains. As yet we have not had as severe storms as we have read about elsewhere.

When you want a good photograph of yourself. go to P. E. Lynne's new gallery in the Anderson-Olson block—second floor.

Do not fail to take your supper at the Congregational fair both evenings and help the good cause it is held for by purchasing some nice xmas presents after supper to take home.

Ladies, we would cordially invite an inspection of our fall and winter cloaks when preparing for cold weather. Prices to suit the times.

A. Sture.

Don't forget that A. D. Morris will stay but a few days longer and he intends to dispose of his stock before he goes. Call and see what he can do for you in jewelry, watches, clocks or silverware.

Best sweat pads at 75 cents per set. Best farm harness from $25 to $27; everything else in proportion at my closing out sale.

H. L. Peake,
Main street, Crookston.

At the Congregational fair on Dec. 1st and 2d the rooms will be open and the goods on sale both afternoon and evening. A fine lot of fancy work done by several of the leading society ladies of Crookston will be found among the goods offered for sale.

Grand closing out sale of jewelry watches, clocks and silverware at A. D. Morris store on Robert street. Remember, anything you want in jewelry you can get at a bargain.

A. Sture calls attention to his full and complete stock of dry goods and groceries and invites our readers to call and look him over. A little money will buy lots of goods at Sture's.

In order that I may be able to commence and succeed with the erection of my store building on the corner of Broadway and Second street, I have decided to sacrifice my stock of jewelry, watches, clocks, silverware, etc., etc., regardless of cost or value. Every article suitable for Christmas presents.

C. H. Saake, the Jeweler.

The Red River Valley Elevator company, in their new location, between Third and Fourth streets, are now prepared to buy or ship for farmers, at reasonable rates, their wheat or other grain. Mr. Wm. Munch, their representative here for the last five years, is still with them and requests all his old friends and patrons to call on him in his new place of business. All others he would ask to give him a trial.

Who said anything about that "mild winter" we were going to have?

Rev. Battey goes to Thief River Falls for two carloads of wood this week.

J. S. LaDue, one of Fertile's most prominent merchants, was in the city on Saturday of last week.

Remember the fair to be held Dec. 1st by the workers of the Congregational church. See announcements.

Services morning and evening next Sabbath at the Congregational church. A kind invitation extended to everybody.

Now fully ready for the holiday trade with a full stock of every thing to be present in a first-class jewelry store. Tom Morris the Jeweler.

On Thursday last Senator Burkhardt received a telegram announcing the sudden death of his father who was 88 years old. The Senator took the evening train for home.

Landlord Clark of the Commercial expects to put in electric lights in the hotel office and add a new set of easy chairs. His Thanksgiving dinner to-day will be a hummer.

C. C. Hoch went to St. Paul last week to arrange for fixtures for his new restaurant. He intends to put the saloon in where Wm. Clements was and fit up his present quarters as a restaurant.

August George has removed to the city to take up his residence here. Mr. George was one of the prominent citizens of Ada and what is Norman county's loss is Polk county's gain. The Journal bids him a cordial welcome to Crookston.

Manager Peterson of the Waterworks Power & Light Co., who had one of his fingers taken off recently, is going around attending to business, with his hand tied up, and although he has suffered great pain, he is now getting around all right.

The various societies of Christian Endeavor met on Sunday and arranged to call a Crookston Endeavor convention to meet in Crookston about the middle of December. It is expected that a large gathering will be had as 25 counties will be represented.

Attend the great fire sale now going on at Williams & Roberts' store in the opera block, and you will get some of the greatest bargains you ever heard of. Their stock was only damaged by water and a great deal of it is practically as good as new, but everything must be sacrificed or given away in 30 days.

The machinery is being put in place at the waterworks power house, and Manager Peterson expects to have one of the pumps started up before long. A large 36 inch endless belt arrived last week, and this is to transmit the power from a fly wheel on the first floor to the machinery on the second floor.

Max Borchard, of Mentor, is to be married to-day at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. W. W. Attix in Grand Forks to Miss Louie Attix, daughter of the late W. W. Attix, of Mentor. The Journal wishes the young couple success and may life's choicest blessings be meted out to them as they travel adown the pathway of life.

The Valley Roller Mills have a gang of men at work driving piles at the north end of the mill and are making preparations to put up a large chain wheel to get power from the waterworks power house. The power will be transmitted by a long chain, and it is expected they will get sufficient power to run the mill, as soon as the waterworks gets started up and there is a sufficient supply of water.

Lots of hay on the market in these days. It finds slow sale at $4 per ton but the farmer who has a few cords of dry wood for sale has a gold mine—but he does not want to delay too long before selling. In a short time or as soon as snow comes wood will begin to come in from points along the railway and then the present prices are liable to be shaded. Now is the time for good prices, but few are availing themselves of the opportunity.

"Carp," of Larson Carpenter & Co., was mystified on Monday at receipt of a genuine, red-headed, warm-hearted bouncing old love-letter—right from the shoulder. It was none of your two-for-a-nickel warmed-over old maid arrangements and for a time made Carp. feel real good—until he happened to find out that it was not meant for him at all but was writ to s'm'other man and then the ambient atmosphere got lurid with his wild and wooly remarks—and he sadly returned the missive to the tender care of Postmaster Dawley marked "opened by mistake" and now he is hunting for that other "George Carpenter."

Miss Ada L. Gates, who has opened a dancing academy in the city, gave one of her instructive dances in the Crookston Business College Tuesday night.

Prof. Whittier has extended his time another week, and will remain in Reckitt Block, Crookston until and including Saturday Dec. 5th, positively no longer.

Engineer Russell of Grand Forks, Engineer Garbeth of the Twin City Iron Works, Minneapolis, and Head Engineer Noxon of the North Dakota Milling association, were in the city this week inspecting the machinery in the waterworks power house.

Prof. F. W. Whittier, Grafton N. D.
Dear Sir: I have received my second pair of glasses (the first having been lost or mislaid) and they are perfectly satisfactory. Could not get along without them for any price.

Yours Truly
Oct. 25, 1892. C. O. Christianson.

F. J. Williams was one of those farmers whose motto is "never say die." Though for three years now he has had either an entire loss of crop or a partial failure, he has prepared 600 acres for wheat next summer and will strike in with renewed energy bound to win.

Hugh Thompson: I'm having a run of bad luck lately. The engine in my mill at Fisher broke down last week, and it will be a week or ten days before it can be put in operation again. This week the mill here has been shut down for a couple of days on account of the pump in the waterworks not working, and the mill couldn't get water.

Having had eye glasses fitted for myself and wife by Prof. Whittier I can truly testify that he has given us entire satisfaction. Mine was a peculiar case and have never before been able to get a perfect fit nor anywhere near it, although I have had my eyes examined by specialists in St. Paul, Minn., and in Christiania, Norway. L. K. Aaker.

Crookston, Minn., Nov. 21st, 1892.

Chris Hoch has purchased his brother's interest in the saloon and restaurant business and will occupy the corner building recently vacated by W. R. Clements. He went to St. Paul this week and purchased new fixtures and when he gets fixed up he will have one of the nobbiest places in the city. Will Hoch expects to leave for the coast country as soon as he can get his business affairs closed out here.

Opinion of Mr. O. H. Lucken:
Crookston Minn. Nov. 21st, 1892.
This is to certify that I have received assistance from Prof. Whittier, optician. I got my eyes tested in a scientific manner by this gentleman and my eyes being a little peculiar my glasses had to be ground especially for me. I have been wearing them now for the past six months and must say that they have been highly satisfactory. I wear them all the time and they never tire my eyes and I enjoy what I never did before perfect congenial vision and most heartily recommend him to the public as being an expert in his profession.

O. H. Lucken.

Prof. Whittier, the optician, is having a big run at the Palace Hotel, and will be pleased to benefit anyone suffering from imperfect sight, consult him at once. Room 128 Reckitt block. Office hours from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. All those that have received treatment are positive in their praise of his methods.

Bert Duntley opened out his cafe on Tuesday evening. He is doing a rattling good business from the start. Try Bert's place for a good square meal.

The Great Northern's Pay Roll.

But few of our citizens know or appreciate the amount of money which is paid out at this point by the Great Northern Railway. That this road contributes in no small degree to the support of the city is shown by the following figures which were kindly furnished by Agent Fegan. The amount paid out for the month of October was $20,633.80. The pay roll for November will exceed that. The improvements which the road has made and is making here, viz: a new bridge, the grading around the depot, raising the track, putting in new rails, moving freight shed and depot, etc., will amount to between $75,000 and $100,000. There are 67 employes of the railroad who have families living in the city, and there are between 150 and 200 employes who run into the city and make this their headquarters. The average monthly pay roll amounts to about $9,000 and it is safe to say that three-fourths of this amount is spent in the city.

Walters' Thanksgiving Dinner.

August Walters, the jolly proprietor of the Crookston brewery just more than laid himself out for a Thanksgiving dinner of vast proportions—such a dinner as would just naturally surprise the natives and bring joy and gladness unto the family circle. He procured a nice fat deer, had it nicely dressed and put away in the ice house, he then obtained two or three nice fat turkeys not to mention, three extra nice fat geese that would make your mouth water just to look at 'em—and Walters just smiled all over his countenance, as, on the night before Thanksgiving, he contemplated a jolly dinner—hanging up in the ice house just before he retired to pleasant dreams of the fine dinner in store for—somebody. Bright and early on Thanksgiving morning he hied him to the ice house aforesaid to deliver unto the hands of the cook his treasures, when lo—and behold—upon opening the door not a thing was to be seen that looked like a Thanksgiving dinner for somebody had been there in the silent watches of the night—and the turkeys and the geese had flown away and the deer—Oh, where was it? And the words that August then and there uttered could in no wise have been construed as words of Thanksgiving, on the contrary quite the reverse. The fellow who got the plunder no doubt had a fine Thanksgiving dinner and Walters says if he can find out who it was he will have a little Thanksgiving dinner all by himself even though the day has passed into history unmarked by the big spread he had anticipated. He says if he finds out who got away with that dinner the thief will wish the comet had hit the earth and made Walters forget all about it.

LOCAL LINES.

A. C. Schmidt has been busy papering McKinnon's hall. When it is completed it will shine forth resplendent.

The Congregational church have extended a call to the Rev. Mr. Smith, of New Duluth, for the ensuing year.

Farmers get your grinding done by Priester & Co., next to the Germania hotel, on Main street, and you will save money by so doing.

In selecting your holiday presents don't neglect to call at Tom Morris' jewelry store and examine his fine new stock. Everything in line. Prices right

W. D. Wilson—at the fair—is not to be outdone on window decorations—just more than spread himself on Tuesday. Gaze upon the bargains therein offered.

Landlord Jerome, of the St. Louis hotel, has bought an elegant wagonette for the use of his guests to and from the trains. It is a daisy.

Mrs. Judge Montague entertained a number of her lady friends at cinch on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. John McKinnon and Mrs. Dan McKinnon won the head prizes.

Jacob Scott was in from Fosston and made this office a pleasant call on Wednesday. Mr. S. says that all who have wood in that section are making active preparations to cut all that is possible this winter.

The St. Louis hotel is putting on lots of style these days. The latest fad is the engaging of colored waiters in the dinning room. Landlord Jerome is bound to keep ahead of the procession if he don't lay up a cent.

The boys at Priester & Co's woodyard cut a cord of wood on Monday in just 11 minutes time. Somebody wanted to bet that they could not do it in 15 minutes and the boys took the bet too quick and won it in 11 minutes.

The ladies should bear in mind that the special sale, inaugurated by Verroneau & Adams still continues and their prices are way, way down. This sale will continue only until the stock is reduced sufficiently to make room for the winter styles. Call early for choice.

O. J. Barnes returned on Thursday of last week with his bride and went to the residence of A. A. Miller to remain until his apartments in the new Fournet block are ready for occupancy. In the afternoon the cornet band proceeded to Mr. Miller's residence and serenaded the happy couple.

Priester & Co., the wood yard proprietors, have put in a feed mill just to utilize the power which they do not need for sawing wood. In this way they can afford to do grinding at very low rates. Anyone having grinding to do should take advantage of this opportunity.

A grand masquerade ball will be given at Fisher on Friday, Dec. 9th, and a good time is promised all those who attend. The people of Fisher are noted for their hospitality, and the young people of the Queen City are invited to go over and have a good time on the 9th.

For a sore throat there is nothing better than a flannel bandage dampened with Chamberlain's Plain Balm. It will nearly always effect a cure in one night's time. This remedy is also a favorite for rheumatism and has cured many very severe cases. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. wallace.

Tom Morris does not make a specialty of "selling out at cost" or less for any alleged excuse, but just keeps right on selling the very best goods in the market at a fair living profit. By the way, he has a large and elegant assortment of jewelry—just the thing for a nobby holiday present. Call and examine his stock.

Priester & Co. are putting up a building on their wood-yard to be used as a feed mill, and intend to grind feed on Fridays and Saturdays. They are sawing wood now every day and intend to be ready to supply all demands in that line. They have secured hundreds of cords of dry wood and greenwood enough to supply the city one year.

Adolph Koeppe has his shop all ready for business and has been awaiting his goods, meanwhile he is making up a lot of choice cigars to be ready for business as soon as his stock and boxes arrive. His choice brand will be named "The Belle of Crookston" and will be a most excellent cigar as we can testify by experience. He will have a neat little place when everything is ready, which he hopes will be early next week when he hopes to see his friends at the new stand on Main street.

Dolls? I reckon. A carload or so at Herb's.

C. C. Reckitt is up from St. Paul this week.

Mr. M. Davis is moving into the city from his farm at Euclid, to-day.

The firm of Tibersar & Wentzel, butchers, assigned this week. Too many meat markets.

J. S. Nichols, the stirring Liberty farmer, was in the city on Tuesday.

Geo. H. Holt was registered at the Clarendon, St. Paul this week.

Have you heard that Locken & Holmboe are slaughtering their entire stock of cloaks?

Assistant Postmaster Geo. McLean, has resigned. That is one man whom Grover cannot bounce.

Wm. Marin and Mr. Walker are putting on an addition to the Commercial house sample room,

A German dramatic club was organized on Saturday evening and will give a public entertainment in the near future. We are told that it will be a corker.

Landlord Sherrer, of the Minnesota house, died on Monday evening. He has been a resident of Crookston for a number of years and took charge of the Minnesota house in June last.

Those elegant flowers were purchased at Herb's.

We see by the papers that Locken & Holmboe are selling their cloaks at cost.

Nellie McDonald, who has been visiting her brother, Dan McDonald, leaves for Bismark. N. D., this morning.

Lewis Ellington was summoned to Forest City, Iowa, by the death of his mother last week, returning on Wednesday morning.

We've got 'em by the car-load, those handsome holiday goods too numerous for description in endless variety and too sweet for anything. Don't fail to see Herb's holiday goods.

The storm of Friday prevented a number of outsiders attending the Calhoun opera. Twenty-five or thirty tickets had been engaged by Red Lake Falls people none of whom showed up and there were tickets engaged at other points that were not claimed. But for the storm no doubt there would have been a big crowd in attendance.

For Christmas presents inspect the dry good and notion department of Locken & Holmboe. Opera Block.

As usual Herb's place is headquarters for holiday goods. When selecting your joys and other presents don't forget to call and see what Herb has. Whatever you want if Herb has not got it you can't find it in the city.

Always Dying.

Life indeed consists in a series of changes of tissue, and the human economy is simply, as far as its material part is concerned, a machine, and primarily depends on food as the most important factor in keeping it in working order. When it is said that we commence to die as soon as we are born, it of course means that certain parts of the body immediately begin to perish; their existence is ephemeral; they come and go, are replenished and decay. They are the dying parts of that system of life, which may last a little while, but which must eventually yield to the inexorable law of nature. The nails, the hair, etc., are observable as an instance of this decay. The same rule applies to every other organ and tissue of the body, though it is not palpable to the naked eye. The skin is always peeling. The food that is taken in the one hour nourishes the system, and ejects that which was taken the hour before.—Gentleman's Magazine.

STILL FOR A TARIFF

PRESIDENT HARRISON AT WORK ON HIS LAST MESSAGE.

Recent Republican Defeat Has Not Changed His Views on the Tariff. Figures from the Annual Report of United States Treasurer Nebeker.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—President Harrison has followed a new method of work in preparing his annual message this year, says a gentleman who saw him at work on it. This message is of particular interest because it will be the last annual message which he will send to congress. It has been the custom of the president in past years to write his message on a pad of memorandum paper, sitting at his desk in his office at the White House or in his room, writing when the fancy seized him or when some idea was suggested to his mind. "But this year," he says, "I am doing something I have never done before. I am dictating my message to a stenographer. I find that the physical effort of writing on this pad of paper is exhausting."

The president looked weary as he spoke. There is not an unhealthy look in his face, but there lies in it today the expression of deep sorrow. It is seamed with wrinkles. The great strain of the long days of Mrs. Harrison's last illness have told upon him. Before they came he was a man of tireless energy. Work never seemed to exhaust him. Particularly was this true of mental labor. The president's ideas flow slowly and steadily, and he grasps his subject with a completeness that is wonderful. He used to sit for hours at a time at his desk writing steadily, not changing a word or altering the position of a comma, so perfectly and so accurately did his thoughts frame themselves.

Still Advocates Protection.

"I prefer to write my message myself," said the president, continuing. "My thoughts flow more freely from my pencil and my words, as they appear on the paper, are an inspiration to me. But I find now that I soon become exhausted. I find, too, that I cannot fix my mind on my subject so readily when I am writing with a pencil. My thoughts wander away from the subject before I have written down the words that come to me. I would greatly prefer to write out my message for I find that my language is stronger, my sentences better rounded when I put them on paper myself."

"The newspapers of the United States are taking a great interest in what you may say on the tariff question," said the visitor. "It looks as though it were McKinleyism that defeated the Republican party and they are anxious to know whether you will modify your views on the question in this message."

The president had thrown himself on to his chair prepared to take up his work again. He leaned back, and looking his visitor squarely in the face, said:

"The newspapers of the United States ought to known me well enough to believe that when I advocate a system I am not going to change my views merely because of a defeat in election."

TOLD BY NEBECKER.

Annual Report of the Treasurer of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The treasurer the United States, Mr. E. H. Nebecke., has submitted his annual report of he year ended June 30, 1892.

The net ordinary revenues of the government for the fiscal year were $354,937,734, a decrease of $37,074,663 as compared with the year before. The net ordinary expenditures were $345,232,043, a decrease of $10,349,749. The surplus revenues were thus cut down from $37,239,762 to $9,914,453.

Analyzing the true condition of the treasury and setting aside the trust funds, the treasurer shows that there was a working balance of cash and deposits in banks amounting to $207,110,452 at the beginning of the year and to $165,718,118 at the end. Of the former amount $119,000,000 and of the latter $114,500,000 was gold.

According to revised estimates the total stock of money in the country on June 30, 1892, was $3,243,343,019, an increase of $150,000,000 in the year. By eliminating that party of the paper currency which is purely representative, consisting of certificates of deposit and treasury notes, the effective stock is found to have been $1,058,033,745, an increase of $70,000,000. Discussing the changes in the amount and composition of the money stock the treasurer finds that the increase which marked the fiscal year was the result of the production of nearly $17,000,000 of gold in excess of the industrial consumption, a fresh issue of $5,000,000 of national bank notes, together with the changes in the stock of silver.

The issue of United States paper currency amounted to $376,726,583, exceeding those of any previous year. The nearest approach to this total was $310,000,000, in the year before; and the next nearest, $201,000,000, in 1868. Of the whole amount $298,000,000 took the place of like kinds and amounts destroyed, while $78,000,000 consisted of fresh issues.

Quarantine Regulations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The treasury department has directed that vessels from all foreign ports hereafter be detained by national quarantine at Cape Charles and the Delaware Breakwater. They will be subject only to local quarantine regulations provided they have no immigrants aboard, have a clean bill of health and had no sickness on board at sea. This regulation will stand during the winter months.

Too Busy to See Them.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Ex-Secretary Warner Miller, of New York, and Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, called at the White House during the afternoon but the president was too busy writing his message to receive them.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A teamster named Cobb was frozen to death at Cloquet Wednesday of last week.

The town of Redwood Falls is rejoicing over the establishment of a foundry at that place.

E. E. Nansolon, a brakeman on the Eastern Minnesota, was killed at Mora while coupling cars.

The jewelry store of A. Truax at Alexandria was robbed of $1,000 worth of goods Friday night.

The buildings of the Indian industrial school at Clontarf were totally destroyed by fire Friday morning.

George P. Butler, a Mankato sewing machine agent, was thrown from his wagon in a runaway and instantly killed.

Scarlet fever is at present raging to an alarming extent in New Ulm. There are not less than fifty cases. Many are dying.

Charles Rynda was instantly killed at Montgomery by the bursting of a wood saw, a piece of which was driven through his brain.

Superintendent Hunt, of the Minnesota world's fair board, reports that the special fund of $100,000 to be contributed by the various counties, has nearly all been raised.

While skating on the Vermillion, near Eggleston, George Tramor, a telegraph operator for the Milwaukee road at Red Wing, broke through the ice and was drowned.

Torgel Simonson, a farmer of Belgrade, managed to raise $610 on a forged ckeck on the Paynesville bank and is now in the Stearns county jail awaiting trial for his crime. It is believed he is insane.

The regular report of the Soldiers' home shows 225 inmates, of whom 66 are absent on leave. During the past ten days seven new inmates have been admitted and four old members discharged.

Miss Mary Washburn, eldest daughter of Senator Washburn, was married on Wednesday evening to E. F. Baldwin, connected editorially with a New York newspaper. There were 3,000 invitations out.

The business men of St. Paul are arranging to recognize the approaching completion of the Great Northern railway to the Pacific coast by giving a grand banquet in honor of the company's president, J. J. Hill.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor societies included in the Northwestern district of the state, comprising some twenty odd counties, will hold a district convention in Crookston, Friday and Saturday, Dec. 16 and 17.

A logging camp east of Pine City burned Friday, consuming the whole outfit and burning to death Frank Thompson, a son of the owner, who had been left in charge. It is supposed the young man was first suffocated.

Freight train No. 2 on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway, was wrecked four miles south of Mazeppa Saturday. The engine, tender and several cars were piled up in less than 150 feet of space. The cars were all smashed up.

State Superintendent Kiehle, of Minnesota, in his seventh biennial report, calls attention to the fact that the Merrill text book contract with the state has expired. He recommends the introduntion of the plan of free text books in the schools of the state, and will so report to the legislature.

W. W. Rich, state food inspector, last week made a careful inspection of seventy-five samples of milk taken from the freight depots of the Milwaukee and Kansas City railway at Minneapolis, most of it being shipped from the southern part of the state. Every sample was found to contain the necessary 3.5 per cent. of fat, showing that the milk was not adulterated.

The somewhat celebrated "dream case" at St. Paul, involving the theft of a $1,000 bill from Mrs. Phillips, of Tacoma, has ended in the conviction of the servant girl, Emma Colby, and her sentence to five years in the penitentiary. She took the bill and gave it to a "lover," who squandered it, and she then attempted to fasten the crime upon her employer, Mrs. Alone, a sister of Mrs. Phillips.

RED RIVER LANDS.

Attorney of the Great Northern Road Conveying Title to the Government.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Thomas R. Benton, of St. Paul, attorney for the Great Northern railroad, is in the city and spent the day at the interior department. Mr. Benton's principal business was that of conveying to the government 54,060 acres of land within the company's grant in the Red river valley. This is the body of land which the government by mistake patented to settlers, and for which the company has accepted an equal quantity in other states.

Shortage of Cars.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 28.—The railroad commission is again receiving complaints from the northern part of the state regarding the shortage of cars for the transportation of wheat. Since the ground has frozen and the farmers stopped ploughing they have been rushing wheat into market all over North Dakota and Minnesota, crowding prices down and filling the elevators to overflowing. Now the complaint is that the companies do not furnish more than half enough cars.

Robbed a Jewelry Store.

ALEXANDRIA, Minn., Nov. 28.—Burglars broke into the jewelry store of W. O. Truax and carried off the entire lot of repair watches, sixty-five in number, and about a dozen new ones. All the jewelry except two trays of scarf pins and some silverware was taken. The loss amounts to $1,500.

CRIBBING CORN.

Advantages of Doing This Early—Shucking from the Shock.

Corn, if reasonably dry, can be put in the cribs measurably early in the fall, especially if proper care is taken to provide good ventilation. There is no advantage in leaving it out in the fall any longer than is strictly necessary; in fact, in leaving it out there is always more or less risk of loss that could be avoided with the corn in the crib. Of course, if put in the cribs damp, and especially if insufficient ventilation is provided, it will heat and spoil, and care must be taken to avoid this.

Shucking corn is better from the shock. As the stalks stand in the field it is not a hard job, if done while the weather is good, as it often is in the fall and early winter. But after it gets cold, and especially if stormy, it often becomes quite a serious task. Where there is considerable shock corn to shuck out a good plan is to have one of the corn cutters and huskers that will shock the corn as it is fed through and at the same time cut the fodder ready for feeding. These of course save considerable labor, besides putting the feed in a much better shape for feeding out.

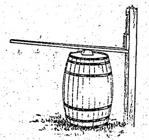
There are a number of these machines on the market now and they have been sufficiently tested to show that they can be relied upon to do the work. With the corn in the crib a considerable saving can readily be made, and all that can be saved helps to increase the profits.

When the corn is dry all reasonable care should be taken to crib early; in nearly all cases it is safer in the crib than in the field, while the work can be done more economically and to a better advantage early in the fall than later. I find that corn can be cribbed earlier than many suppose, and especially fodder corn that has been cut in good season and put up in good shocks. It dries out very rapidly unless the weather is unusually wet, when of course the work will be delayed.

The plan of a Prairie Farmer correspondent—quoted above—is to shuck out the fodder first, for two reasons. It is usually driest, and if delayed until bad weather sets in the work is more disagreeable than to shuck what is left standing. Then the fodder can be hauled up and stacked near where it is to be fed out. It will keep in a much better condition than if left in the field, and this of course is a saving, and in nearly all cases by the time the fodder is out of the way the rest of the corn is dry enough to crib.

Winter Apples.

Winter apples will keep all the better for being left in an open, airy place as late as it is safe to do so. Where there are but few apples to barrel a press can be made at home that will serve very well. The Philadelphia Farm Journal suggests the one here depicted.



PRESS FOR BARRELING APPLES.

This press can be quickly rigged by using a plank or scantling with one end under a stud reaching to the shed plate and temporarily nailed in place. The barrel to be headed forms the fulcrum. Be careful not to press the apples too hard.

A reader of the journal quoted says that the best apples of the season in Bucks county were brought out of a milk vault Feb. 7, 1892. They were Fallawaters, of a rich yellow color, with characteristic shading. They were remarkable for size, but more remarkable for their perfect preservation. Compared with apples kept in the cellar of the same house they were in far better order. The inference is that the deeper milk vault maintained a more uniform temperature. The vault had a small ventilator direct to the open air. The temperature as near as could be ascertained was about 55 degs.

Contagious Pleuro-pneumonia.

Secretary Rusk has given official notice that the United States is free from pleuro-pneumonia, and all quarantines heretofore existing for its suppression are removed. The secretary's official proclamation of the freedom of the United States from pleuro-pneumonia was delayed until six full months from the occurrence of the last case. The seaboard and frontier inspection and all necessary cattle quarantine will be strictly enforced, and there being no possibility of the occurrence of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, save by its introduction from foreign countries, the country may congratulate itself upon the removal of all apprehension for its cattle interests on the score of contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

Agricultural News.

Slaughter houses in Scotland are furnished with apparatus for stunning cattle by electricity.

Sweet potato flour warranted to keep in any climate is now promised. It is to be made from the kiln dried chips by a patented process.

Insect Life notes the spread of the hornfly, reports being cited of its recent appearance in different counties of Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Texas, Massachusetts, Ohio, Iowa and Florida.

It is reported from the Indiana station that mowing wheat in spring to check rankness of growth shortened the stems, retarded the ripening and considerably reduced the yields of both grain and straw.

The total crop of oats in Canada is estimated at 85,000,000 bushels, against 90,000,000 last year.

gradually growing worse. Three years ago I got down so low that I could scarcely walk. I looked more like a corpse than a living being. I had no appetite and for five weeks I ate nothing but gruel. I was badly emaciated and had no more color than a marble statue. Hood's Sarsaparilla was recommended and I thought I would try it. Before I had finished the first bottle I noticed that I felt better, suffered less, the inflammation of the bladder had subsided, the color began to return to my face, and I began to feel hungry. After I had taken three bottles I could eat anything without hurting me. Why, I got so hungry that I had to eat 5 times a day. I have now fully recovered, thanks to

SILVER FOR MONEY.

THE CONFERENCE AT BRUSSELS IN FULL BLAST.

Senators Allison and Jones Outline the Position of the United States on Bi-Metalism—Prospects That Something Practical May Be Done.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 26.—At the meeting of the international monetary conference Senator William B. Allison and Senator John P. Jones set forth the American proposals and reviewed the monetary situation in the United States and other countries represented by conference. He submitted a general plan on bi-metalism offered by the United States showing:

First—That the re-establishment and maintenance of a fixed parity between gold and silver and the continued use of both as coined money of full debt paying power would be productive of important benefit to the world. The American delegates also submitted a resolution declaring that in the opinion of the conference it is desirable that means be found for an increasing use of silver in the currency systems of the nations. A document proposed by the American delegates and presented with the resolution explained that they wished that an opportunity be afforded to consider their plans.

The document submitted by the Americans concluded as follows: These ends will be accomplished by the removal of the legal restrictions now existing and the coinage of silver into full legal tender money, restoring by international agreement a parity of value between the metals at such a ratio as the conference may decide upon. The essentials of such an international agreement should be:

First—The unrestricted coinage of both gold and silver into money of full debt paying power.

Second—Fixing a ratio of the coinage between the metals.

Third—The establishment of a uniform charge, if any, to the public for coining gold and silver coins.

English influences are evidently busy in opposing American schemes. The English delegates hardly made any concealment of the fact that they mean, if possible, to make the conference unsuccessful. They privately hint that the object of England's representation in the conference is to enable the British government to tell the government of India that they have done all that is possible, and that, if no agreement can be arrived at, it is because the problem is an insolvable one.

ROTHSCHILD'S SCHEME.

What He Would Do With Silver—Working With the Americans.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 29.—In the international monetary conference Mr. Alfred de Rothschild, of the English delegation, proposed that the powers engaged in the conference should form an association having for its object collective purchase annually of 5,000,000 pounds sterling, equal to 125,000,000 francs of silver, this to continue for a maximum period of five years under the express condition that the government of the United States should continue its monthly purchase of silver similar to the purchases heretofore made by said government equal to 54,000,000 ounces of silver. Also that the collective purchases of the powers should be suspended, should silver reach the price of 43 pence an ounce, the result desired being to consider how to obtain that rate.

The Rothschild proposal was referred to a special commission of fourteen delegates. The commission was instructed to consider and report on the plans of Moses Levy and Adolph Rothschild mentioned in the proposals of the United States delegates. The commission on the American proposal will sit daily and will report to the conference on next Friday. The Americans manifest increased hope that the conference will not adjourn without having achieved some substantial results.

Mead Case Continued.

WAUPACA, Wis., Nov. 29.—The court convened Monday for the purpose of trying the Mead murder case. Judge Webb called the case and District Attorney Guernsey stated that it was the desire on the part of the state to continue the case over the term. Attorney Sanborn said it was a shame to keep the defendant in suspense; that the defense was ready and the state had had lots of time and still they courted delay. Judge Webb granted a continuance until the March term. He refused to grant Bronson, Stout and Prior separate trials.

McLuckie and Ross Return.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 29.—Ex-Burgess McLuckie, of Homestead, and Hugh Ross were in the criminal court during the day waiting for their cases to be called, having just arrived from Youngstown, O., where they have been for a long time. Had they not appeared their bail bond, amounting to about $18,000 each, would have been forfeited. Burgess McLuckie had little to say beyond that he was now prepared to stand trial. Mr. Ross also said that he was now ready for the ordeal.

Non-Union Men Discharged.

HOMESTEAD, Nov. 29.—One hundred non-union workmen left the Carnegie mill during the morning in a body. It is presumed they were discharged, but the mill officials refuse to make any statement concerning them. This will make an opening for employment of a corresponding number from the ranks of the strikers.

Blaine Doing Nicely.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—James G. Blaine, Jr., says: "Father is doing nicely. He was up again during the day and moving around the room. We are very much pleased with the prospect of recovery."

THE GRAIN BLOCKADE.

Over a Million Bushels Awaiting Shipment in South Dakota.

HURON, Nov. 29.—Chairman Rice, of the state railway commission, went to the southern part of the state Monday to secure, if possible, a break in the wheat blockade. He estimates that over a million bushels of wheat are stored in warehouses and elevators on various lines of road in South Dakota awaiting shipment. The Northwestern has added ten locomotives to the Dakota division the past week, and is doing its utmost to relieve the overburdened elevators and warehouses. Ovar 200 car loads have been sent from this immediate vicinity during the past twenty-four hours. On this division alone over 1,000,000 bushels of wheat were shipped to Eastern markets last month. The present blockade is worse than that experienced last November and is likely to continue till the middle of February. The Milwaukee line has added largely to its rolling stock but is unable to meet the demand of shippers. At many points on that line buyers have given notice to farmers not to haul grain to market as it could not be received.

THE IMMIGRATION QUESTION.

Divergent Views of the Senate Committee Makes Progress Very Slow.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Senator Chandler, chairman of the senate committee on immigration, said that little progress had been made in dealing with the question of immigration by the committee. The failure to arrive at an immediate conclusion on the subject is said to be due to the diverging opinions of the nine members of the committee. Nearly every member has different views of what kind of legislation is needed. Some favor, for a time at least, the stopping of all immigration, while others think the restriction of immigration to half or one-fourth of its present proportions would be sufficient for the present. A conference is being held by members of the committee for the purpose of trying to unite upon a single scheme.

THE FLOOD OVER.

High Water in Washington State Rapidly Receding.

SEATTLE, Nov. 25.—The flood is practically over. The water in the rivers generally is within the banks. The Duwamish and Black rivers have fallen five feet during the day and the Snohomish about the same during the night. The danger to the Duwamish county bridge and Snohomish railroad bridge from the jams is now over and the latter are being cleared out fast. The Great Northern has started on the coast lines, transferring at the wrecked bridge near Samish lake. Chief Engineer Beckler says the damage to the Great Northern main line is not so serious as at first reported.

Germany's Emigration Bill.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—A dispatch to The Daily News from Berlin says that the new German emigration bill compels all emigration agents to take out licences and submit their books to the government for inspection. The bill prohibits emigration of men between the ages of 17 and 25, who are liable to military service. It also prohibits the emigration of Germans whose fares are paid by a foreign company or agent. Several other stringent regulations are introduced, the purpose of which is to render emigration difficult.

Egan Goes Back to Chili.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—Hon. Patrick Egan has left here for Washington after being entertained by Harlow N. Higginbotham, president of the world's fair directory. At Washington, after arranging some details at the state department, Mr. Egan will proceed to Chili to further adjust the claims made by American citizens, some of which extend back to 1815.

Senator Colquitt Convalescent.

ATLANTA, Nov. 29.—Senator Colquitt and his wife, both of whom have been suffering from paralysis, are now convalescent. Senator Colquitt will be in his seat in the senate in January.

SHOW A BIG INCREASE.

Estimated Running Expenses of the Government for the Ensuing Year.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—All the estimates compiled by the several executive departments, with the exception of those of the interior department, are now in the hands of Secretary Foster, of the treasury department, and are being printed for submittal to congress when it meets in December. The estimates, as far as they have been compiled by treasury officials, show an increase of $53,500,000 over the estimate for the same branches of the public service for the last fiscal year, which amounted to $400,608,693. The estimates for the departments of justice, agriculture and labor and state show a slight increase, amounting in all of them, when footed up, to not more than $1,500,000. The executive branch proper—the White House—is about the same as last year, and the judiciary appropriations, too, are but little increased. To carry on the military and naval establishments more money, it is thought, will be needed, and combined these two departments ask an increase of about $4,000,000. The establishment of many additional postoffices and the necessary establishment of new offices have been a tax on the receipts of the postoffice department and the expenditures it is estimated will exceed the receipts by $5,000,000, an increase of expenditures over this year's estimate of nearly $3,000,000. The treasury estimates will be advanced about $5,000,000, caused in a large measure by the erection of public buildings during the past fiscal year, which will have to be furnished and supplied with janitors, etc., and the increased pay given the men employed in the life saving service, etc. It is in the interior department, however, that the greatest increase is shown. While the estimates from this department are not known, that for pensions alone $185,000,000 will be required which is an increase of more than $40,000,000. The figures given above are all rough estimates. Though not official they are believed to be approximately correct and are decidedly interesting.

VERDICT OF ACQUITTAL.

Trial of Sylvester Critchlow, the Homestead Striker, at an End.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 24.—The trial of Sylvester Critchelow, charged with murder in connection with the Homestead riot, was brought to a close during the evening by the jury bringing in a verdict of acquittal. When the court convened in the morning arguments by counsel were resumed. The judge delivered his charge at 2:30 p. m. Referring to the riot he said:

"If the jury is satisfied that the defendant took part in the riot of July 6, which resulted in the death of T. J. Connor and that it was the common intent of such rioters to resist the landing of these men on the barges to the extent of taking life, then he is guilty of murder in the first degree as are all who took part in such riot. If you believe these rioters met for a common purpose, to resist the landing but not to the extent of taking life, then a verdict of murder in the second degree should be rendered."

When the judge closed the jury retired and after deliberating for two and a half hours they brought in a verdict of acquittal. Mr. Critchelow, however, will be held on the charge of riot.

SUSTAINED THE CHARGE.

The Cincinnati Presbytery Trying Professor Smith for Heresy.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 29.—The Cincinnati presbytery by a vote of 44 to 17 has sustained the first charge against Professor Smith, of the Lane Theological seminary. The specifications were voted on one at a time and all were sustained by a large majority except the last. On this a rising vote was necessary, Drs. Bryan and Roberts voted not to sustain the specification but it carried by a small majority.

Bank Robbers Caught.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 28.—Three of the five robbers who robbed the Roslyn, Wash., bank of $10,000 Sept. 24, were captured Friday in the Cascade mountains in the central part of Oregon. The prisoners have been fully identified by the bank officials. They give their names as Peter Malcomb, John Huntington and Halsted Smith. They are believed to be the same men who robbed the banks at The Dalles and La Grande, Or., during the past year.

Reservation Gamblers Arrested.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 24.—John Murray, a Canadian who has been giving Uncle Sam trouble on the Oneida reservation, was brought in during the day by Deputy Marshal Buckley. Another man was brought in Wednesday. The men were running a gambling house on the reservation.

GOV. MERRIAM is mentioned as a probable person to fill the unexpired term of Gen. Nettleton as assistant secretary of the treasury, but it seems that he has not been consulted in the matter as yet and is looking for higher game.

PRESIDENT-ELECT CLEVELAND gives it out emphatically that he will consider no applications for positions until after the 4th of March next, when he has assumed the reins of government, and those who keep bothering him now with their appeals only lessen their chances of receiving appointments by their unseemly haste in making application. When the proper time comes Grover will make up his jewels, but not before.

THE business men of St. Paul propose to get up a big demonstration some time this month in honor of J. J. Hill, upon the completion of the Great Northern railway to the Pacific coast. There will be a grand industrial parade and in the evening a banquet in the Metropolitan opera house, The Great Northern is the first transcontinental line built without government aid, and will be a lasting monument to the enterprise and energy of its promoter—J. J. Hill.

THE control of the Kansas legislature will be decided by lot. The vote in Coffee county was a tie and should the republicans win they would have control in which case Mrs. Lease would not be sent to represent Kansas in the U. S. senate and she might not anyway for in case the populists won, on the contrary lots they would have to secure the aid of the few democrats in the legislature to elect their senator.

FROM what we can learn about Mr. Blaine's reported illness it would appear that some enterprising newspaper men have been exceedingly fresh, sending out the report that he was not expected to survive the attack. The facts seem to be that he has been suffering from a hard cold but at no time has he been considered in a dangerous condition by his physician. But the newspapers must have something to write about so they have made the most of this opportunity—and overdone it.

THE International Monetary Conference now being held in Brussels does not—from present appearances—promise satisfactory results. The American delegates want some measure which will increase the use of silver throughout the world. The European nations—that do not produce silver—are not likely to approve of this plan, and hence it will be difficult to fix upon a satisfactory currency basis. The British delegates are anxious to end the convention in a few weeks, to the end that a full and free discussion of the question may not be had.

THE question of calling an extra session of congress will probably be the test of strength between the southern and the northern democrats. The southern democrats are trying to convince Cleveland that an extra session is necessary. They are out and out free traders and want the tariff repealed without delay, believing that it is injuring the country. The northern democrats do not want any material change made in the tariff, and they don't want an extra session. If the south has more influence with the president than the north then there is some chance of an extra session—but not otherwise.

Always Equal to the Emergency.

No sooner does a man wish for something in the Railroad line than the Northern Pacific Railroad is on hand to furnish it. This time it is Canadian Winter Excursions. Upon November 29th, December 6th, and any day from December 13th to 22nd, and again on December 27th, any man or woman in North Dakota or Northern Minnesota can buy a round trip ticket to Montreal, good for 90 days, for only $40.

Any person living in Manitoba can do the same thing, on any day from November 28th to December 31st. By payment of very reasonable amounts extra, other trips can be added to this, and tickets extended. In addition to all this, the Northern Pacific will, in connection with the Wisconsin Central run through Pullman Tourist Sleeping cars, on November 29th, December 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th. To connect with a special train, which will leave St. Paul upon arrival of Northern Pacific train in the morning, and run through to Chicago, by day light, arriving there in time to connect with all trains for Canadian points leaving there that night.

This special train is for the sole pleasure and accommodation of the Canadian Winter Excursionists, has a parlor car attached, and the charge for berth in sleeping car and seat in parlor car to Chicago is only $2.00. This practically gives the Canadian Winter Tourist the earth, only he doesn't get it fenced in. By buying these winter excursion tickets, you get a fine opportunity to visit the world's fair grounds and buildings, and see what a wonderful place it is there. All information, maps, tickets etc., can be obtained of any agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, by either writing or calling personally.

Modern Fashions and History.

The present season opened with a rich display of new styles, and what makes them particularly attractive is the fact that, for the greater part, they are derived from an historical source. Thus, the Louis XV. and and Louis XVI., pretty conceits are seen by the side of the picturesque Directoire and Empire Costumes, and the graceful fancies of the 1830 period—all these, to be sure, in their modern modifications and relieved by the artistic touch of our contemporary taste. A great freedom of selection is, consequently, afforded to every lady, for no single leading style will prevent her from following her natural taste. To fully understand the past origin of the varied modes of our coming season, and their development into their present adaptations, no surer guides could be obtained than the McDowell Fashion Journals. "Paris Album of Fashion" and "La Mode de Paris" are great favorites and sell, each for 35 cents a copy, or $3.50 a year. "La Couturiere" has a wide success, being 30 cents a copy, or $3.00 a year. "La Mode" is the best Home Fashion Journal, consisting only 15 cents a copy, or $1.50 per annum. They are supplied by newsdealers, or by applying directly to the house, at No. 4 West 14th Street, New York City.

A Chance to Choose.

In the early days of railroads, the passenger had "Hobson's Choice" of accommodations—take the passenger coach (such as it was) or walk. During the war for the Union, Mr. Pullman came upon the scene and invented the sleeping car. Still it was "Hobson's Choice"—unless you paid an additional charge, and tipped the porter also. Now it is a fact that there are many persons, rich enough to buy a railroad ticket, and intelligent enough to travel without getting lost, who do not care to pay extra for either comfort or luxuriousness. The Burlington route was quick to recognize the existence of this fact, and it equips all its principal passenger trains with reclining chair cars, and makes no extra charge to any one for occupying seats in them. Its morning and evening trains between St. Paul and Minneapolis on the north, and Chicago and St. Louis on the east and south, carry these cars. Make a note of it, and ask your home agent for tickets via the Burlington route, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of the state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

STORY OF A PLAIN MAN

HISTORY OF ONE BUSINESS ENTERPRISE IN NEW YORK.

A Youth Who Ran Away from Home and Went to the Metropolis Grow to Be a Very Successful Merchant—His Wife's Share in His Great Success.

A good example of how fortunes are made in New York city is afforded by the life and business operations of Millard Fillmore Tompkins, who died at the age of thirty-nine years. Mr. Tompkins was almost penniless when, a mere boy, he first came to this city. He understood his business, however, and he had the courage to strike out into a new path. The result was that building his business up little by little he died worth $600,000. To his wife, fully as much as to himself, this success is due, and Mr. Tompkins was always the first to acknowledge this.

When Mr. Tompkins was fourteen years old he ran away from the home where he was born, at Newport, R. I., and came to this city, with the usual resolve of making a fortune for himself. He had ten dollars in his pocket when he started. This, with what knowledge of groceries he had picked up at the markets near his home, constituted his stock in trade. Naturally on reaching the city he drifted to the grocery districts, and got work as clerk in a grocery store on Catharine street. The proprietor of the store at first paid the lad barely enough to keep him alive; but realizing that young Tompkins was getting so thorough a knowledge of the trade as to make him valuable he raised his wages very soon.

Instead of living in accordance with his increased means, Tompkins continued to live in the same manner as before, putting aside all his surplus money for the purpose of buying a horse and truck. A picture of him taken shortly after his fifteenth birthday looks more like that of a man of twenty-eight than a young boy. He was then tall and well developed, with a good sized mustache and "sideburns." It was more than two years before the young clerk had saved enough to buy such a horse and truck as he wanted. When at length he went into the truck business he made money so rapidly that at the end of two years he was enabled to sell out and establish a retail grocery store in Spring street, near Clinton market.

It had been his idea since his arrival in New York to own a grocery store. There were at that time no cheap cash down groceries in the city. Tompkins made up his mind that there was money to be made in a purely cash business, with a cheap scale of prices for trade among the poorer people. Following out this idea he increased his business to such an extent that he soon moved to a larger store, and then to a still larger one. Within two years after the purchase of his first store Mr. Tompkins, now twenty-one years old, bought out the large grocery at Spring and Sullivan streets, and hired another building for a storehouse near by. It was about this time that he met Mina Josephine Cooper, of 27 Charlton street. He fell in love with her, and after a short courtship, notwithstanding that Miss Cooper was only sixteen years old, they were married. From that time on Mr. Tompkins had a partner in his business as well as in his life.

"You go on and extend the business," said young Mrs. Tompkins to her husband. "I can manage the Spring street store while you look after the general matters." And she did. With a school knowledge of figures and bookkeeping she went into the Spring street store, mastered the business in every detail, and alone and unaided has conducted it up to the present time in such a manner as to make it the most successful establishment owned by Mr. Tompkins. The business spread steadily, new stores being established in Bleecker street, Ninth and Sixth avenues, and in other places in this city and Jersey City, until at the time of his death Mr. Tompkins owned eleven retail stores, besides the two wholesale establishments at 53-61 Gansevoort street.

From the first Mr. Tompkins stuck by his principles of cash payments. He discounted all his bills, and thus was able to buy where others could not, dealers who were in need of ready money often coming to him in preference to others, as they knew that they could get cash for their goods. It was his idea to drop gradually his retail trade and go into the wholesale business entirely. The care of so many establishments was wearing on him, but he absolutely refused to let any one else take part in the management.

"I have built up the business and I will run it," he said. "I want no partners or managers to tell me what to do. When I want advice I can go to my wife. I would rather have her judgment on matters connected with the grocery business than that of any man in New York. I have been guided always by her advice, and to her fully as much, if not more than to myself, the success of our business is due."—New York Sun.

How Sullivan Composes Music.

Sir Arthur Sullivan, the composer, was recently asked where he was able to compose best, and under what circumstances his ideas flowed most freely. He replied that there was no place in which he had so many inspirations as in a railway carriage. There is something in the rapidity of the motion, in the clanging of the iron and in the whirring of the wheels which seems to excite his imagination and supplies material for a host of harmonies.—London Star.

To Predict a Storm.

By placing two iron bars at seven or eight yards distance from each other, and putting them in communication on one side by an insulated wire and on the other side with a telephone, it is said that a storm can be predicted twelve hours ahead through a certain dead sound heard in the receiver.—Philadelphia Ledger.

RARE GEMS IN BOOKS.

LITERARY TREASURES IN THE ASTOR LIBRARY IN NEW YORK.

Volumes That Are Storehouses of Scholarship and Are Worth Small Fortunes. Ancient Illustrations in Priceless Manuscripts.

Even many otherwise well informed people are not aware that the public libraries of this city contain some of the choicest literary gems extant—books for which wealthy bibliophiles have offered fabulous sums. If New York is not the literary center of America, then books immense in number, rare in antiquity and almost priceless in value are not factors in the competition.

There are thirty-four public libraries in New York, and the number and value of the volumes within their walls have grown so rapidly that Paris, Munich and even London will be surpassed in their library collections if the present growth continues.

The day when the citizen of New Amsterdam was content to sit outside his door, drink beer, smoke, grow fat and die in the firm belief that he had enjoyed life, has given way to an entirely different state of affairs.

Twenty-five years ago one public library collection was considered sufficient to meet the demands of every class, calling or profession. Today nine institutions can be picked out, each one of which is patronized by a single class.

The Astor is the richest of all our libraries. One million dollars' worth of books repose upon its shelves, but not without frequent disturbance. From fifty to 100 studious men and women are delving into the enchanting mysteries of some favorite theme every day that the reading rooms are open to the public.

The library contains nearly $200,000 worth of rare books and manuscripts, which are seldom allowed to go into the hands of the public. Perhaps the largest and finest single volume in New York may be found there. If any one thinks that the contemporaries of Shakespeare and Milton would marvel at the superb product of modern illustrators he is very much mistaken. Nothing has been produced in the last century that can equal, much less rival, the illustrations in a Seventeenth century manuscript entitled "Antiphonale." It contains 228 pages of vellum, adorned by 272 small and 53 large miniatures in the highest style of the French art of that day. Some of its illustrations have been attributed to Le Brun, the great painter of the time of Louis XIV. The larger paintings for the most part are scenes from the Scriptures appropriate to the various church festivals, and many of the initial letters which accompany the stanzas are illumined in a style wholly unknown at the present day. This volume, bound in purple morocco, with gilt mountings and ornamented with the flower-de-luce, was designed for the coronation of Charles V. At a public sale it would easily command several thousand dollars.

Another valuable work is Sylvester's "Universal Paleography," in two volumes, containing upward of 300 finely executed facsimiles of mediæval works of art. This sumptuous work is said to have cost the sum of £20,000 for its execution alone. Among other rarities is a copy of the first letter written by Christopher Columbus after he discovered America. There are only six copies of these in existence. The letter consists of only four leaves, but at a London auction sale in 1872 it brought $700.

Another rare volume to be found only in this library is Lloyd's "History of Columbia, Now Called Wales," published in 1654. It contains the legendary narrative of the expedition of Prince Modoc and a Welsh company that voyaged to America prior to Columbus, but never returned. Many foreigners have sent to this country for abstracts from this rare volume.

The earliest known editions of Ptolemy's geography repose on the shelves of the Astor. The dates on their title pages range from 1478 to 1621. There is also a superb specimen of the "Biblia Sacra Latina" of 1462, the first edition of the Bible bound in old crimson morocco, with gilt edges, which is worth $10,000. Inside the covers are the names of those "immortal printers," Johann Faust and Peter Schaffer. The oldest polyglot edition of the Scriptures, executed at the order of Cardinal Ximenes, which cost 50,000 ducats in gold and fifteen years for its preparation, is also at the Astor. The oldest manuscript of all is the "Lectiones Evangeliis," printed on vellum and containing whole pages of illuminations. This manuscript was executed by the monks in A. D. 1470, and is almost priceless in value. No other library in America possesses such a treasure. Next in point of antiquity is John Wyclif's English version of the New Testament, written in 1390, and containing the autobiography of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester. There are also two rich Persian manuscripts of the Fifteenth century, besides manuscripts of more recent date.

Several competent Egyptologists, among them the late Miss Amelia B. Edwards, who inspected the collection during her visit to this city, have pronounced the library especially rich in oriental works. The great work of James Audubon on the "Birds of America," consisting of four volumes, would probably bring $5,000. Elliott's Indian Bible, dated 1661, the first Bible printed in America; the Geneva, or the Breeches Bible of 1569; a copy of the papal bull against Luther, 1520; rare Siamese manuscripts, and the valuable and interesting collection of autograph letters from emperors, poets, statesmen, presidents, soldiers and authors are included in this collection.—New York Herald.

THE WAY TO GO SIGHTSEEING.

An Old Philosopher Gives the Benefit of His Experience.

For sightseers I will lay down two or three rules which have guided me more and more in my habits of traveling, and for which I think there is good foundation:

If you will stay two or three days in one place you will get that sort of affection for it and knowledge of its interior life, if one may use so large a phrase, which makes you always remember it with pleasure. If, on the other hand, you should spend the same three days in going to three different places you have in each of them only the annoyance of dropping your anchor and pulling it up again, only the little trials which necessarily belong to the first hours in an inn or a lodging house, and before these little annoyances are well over you have gone on your way again.

My experience is that I have very little recollection of any sort of places where I have simply spent a night or a part of a day, and that for filling up that great fund of experience and memories the maintenance of which is the great object of traveling it is always desirable to remain for a little while where you are well off, that you may become acquainted not simply with the circumstances, but with the real character of what in a certain way you may thus make a home.

I hold that no man should travel with the mere idea of being amused. He has no right to walk into a town or an inn and say to the first person he meets there, "Come and amuse me; show me what there is which is entertaining." Wherever a man goes he should carry certain tastes of his own, should have certain objects which have interested him in life, and he should inquire with regard to those objects, as this particular place may have an answer to give to his inquiries.

And this I say with a good deal of hesitation. I know nothing in the mere crossing of the water which should change us all into critics of fine art. I am always a little amazed when I go by chance into a picture gallery in Paris, in Brussels, or in Antwerp, to find there some well to do Americans whom I never should by any accident have found in the academy at New York or the art gallery in Boston. I cannot see why we should all be compelled to see paintings in Europe, and in every city in Europe, when at home we do not consider the examination of paintings to be our principal and especial business. I like to see a good picture, I think, as much as anybody does. But I cannot understand why the profession of a traveler and that of a connoisseur in art should be considered, as certainly they are considered, as being very much the same thing. So I do not believe, as I say, that a person gains qualifications for an art critic by the accident of his crossing the ocean.

To young travelers I am forever saying, "Keep scrapbooks." They are even better than journals, by which I mean, preserve little queer bits of printed information which will come drifting into your hands every day, and which in after years will have a value from association which of course does not attach to them, and by the same token whatever is written at the moment has a freshness afterward which no recollection brought out on rainy days can rival. Here is the advantage of a fountain pen or a half dozen sharpened pencils, of which you cannot very easily lose all. Your journal may be no sort of use to anybody else, but it will always be of value to yourself.—Edward Everett Hale in Boston Commonwealth.

Judge Not Too Quickly.

A mother whose temper is impulsive should never trust her first hasty judgment in the management of her little ones.

In the larger affairs of the neighborhood and of society the prudent person refuses to judge hastily. He gives the benefit of the doubt wherever and whenever and to whomsoever he can. People have a right to ask that before they are weighed in the balances and found wanting their cases shall be looked at from all sides and from the most favorable point of view. It is not well to assume that blushes and down dropped eyes always indicate guilt. Innocence falsely accused is often ashamed to look its accuser in the face. Judge not, that ye be not judged, was said by the purest lips that ever spoke on earth.

The man or woman whose habit it is to indulge in snap judgments of any kind is necessarily narrow and undeveloped.—Harper's Bazar.

Rainfall in Australia.

Australia seems to have had an unusual rainfall this year, though it does not equal that of 1890, when, according to a report just issued by the government astronomer of New South Wales, the average for the whole colony was 32.75 inches, or 32.6 per cent. greater than the average of the sixteen preceding years. Forests do not seem to have aided in cloud precipitation, for while a densely timbered region the amount was 35.89 inches, the mean of nine of the nearest stations in an open country was 38.92 inches.

Elevation, however, has a marked influence on rainfall. At Wallagong, half a mile from the sea, at an elevation of sixty-seven feet, 38.84 inches fell, while at Cordeaux river, six miles from the sea, it is 55.53 inches.—Mediterranean Naturalist.

VALUE OF THREATS.

HOW DESIGNING PERSONS TAKES A MEAN ADVANTAGE.

Wives Are Frequently Terrorized by Their Husbands, While Scapegrace Sons and Wayward Brothers Use Their Positions to Extort Money.

The threat as a weapon of social warfare has not yet been given its truly important place. The sanest persons are inclined to regard the threat as the outcome of a vain and feeble mind and are prompted to laugh when the villain cries "Beware!" Much as we may despise the threat, yet it is indubitable that more people are influenced and made to do what is against their wishes by this means than by actual violence.

The threat wielder is naturally punily proportioned, mentally and physically, and exercises his power most effectually in the woman's world. Women more than men have reason to dread the threat, for man can either afford to run its dangers or proceed to immediate punishment. The woman is defenseless, and though she would frequently like to proceed to extreme, yet traditional convention keeps her within bounds. Threats are so varied that it would require a large volume to describe them all, but we will speak of the more common.

The dissatisfied son is well known to society. He greedily seizes every occasion to drag his name through the mire and besmirch the family. He is frequently remonstrated with; prayers, tears, exhortations are in vain. Then comes the last injunction, "If you persist in this last course I will disinherit you." "Go ahead," replies the young reprobate; "you cut off my supplies, and I'll disgrace the whole family."

One threat is sufficient to procure the means for his vile wants, and the household lives in abject terror lest the threat wielder put into execution his promise of further tortures. It is not only bad sons who exercise this baleful system of money getting; it is as freely employed by bad brothers and husbands.

The pleasant and affectionate brother is probably now reading the society columns of the daily and weekly papers with the utmost care. His drunken comrades once twitted him about his "craze."

"Well," said the unblushing scoundrel, "d'ye see, I have a sister who's no end way up, and when I find she's going to give a party to the nobs I drop her a line and say I'm coming. It fetches the stuff, it does." This heartless scheme to filch from her money to cover her disgrace found a peculiar charm for the besotted minds of his companions. The threat was more potent than the performance, for if the good lady had had the moral courage to send for an officer and declare the fellow a lunatic she would have been saved from his now never ending persecution.

How many women suffer from the threat of their devoted husbands? And how many wives slave themselves to death through threats from their spouses?

The threat cannot be successfully wielded by men whose mentality lacks intuition. To a man whose intuitions are good, and who reads human nature easily, the threat is a powerful weapon. It really requires a man who can analyze emotion and passion to reach the acme of perfection as a threat wielder. The vulgar threatener loses his charm, but the accomplished villain can so torture his victim or victims that the pangs endured by the patrons of the auto da fe were exquisite pleasures in comparison.

Apparently the kindest and most subservient husbands can, by judiciously handling of the threat, drive their wives almost to desperation at a social function, and none but them know of the secret punishment. To employ the threat so that it pesters every fiber of your victim's body the tenderest points in your opponent's armor must be known. That once being discovered it is marvelous what ramifications the threat can take. The merest glance can become a threat, and the person is as completely under the glamour of this delicate inquisition as the diminutive mouse in the claws of a powerful cat.

The most successful threat is not to the woman herself, for a woman's patience and pluck under such circumstances can be provokingly humiliating, and there is no man who feels exactly a hero when the person he has sworn to honor and protect will regard him with humid eyes and meekly say, "As you like, dearest."

Women, as a general rule, love martyrdom, and there are some so peculiarly constituted as to derive the severest enjoyment from the contemplation that their liege lords were harboring in their minds some hideous schemes of vengeance against them. But where this would fail the threat of the amiable individual to do something to himself would be eminently successful. Women above all things feel disgrace, and the anguish at the loss of an unamiable husband by being hit over the head with a bungstarter is trivial when compared to the sorrow for the manner of his death. It would not be for the flight of her husband's soul the tears were shed, but for the disgraceful circumstances attending the departure. The fact that it was not a respectable demise for which she could be properly consoled would be the only bitter remembrance of her sweet widowhood.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Fun for the Monkey.

A pet monkey was sitting in my grandmother's drawing room when a lady came in and sat down. The monkey, after watching her for some time from the back of the chair on which he was perched, snatched the visitor's bonnet from her head, put it on his own, and defied all attempts to catch him and rescue the bonnet. At last, the window being open, he leaped out upon the lamppost, and there sat, sharing the delight of the passersby, looking as Blucher must have looked when, years after, he appeared on the field of Waterloo in an old lady's bonnet.—London Spectator.

Some Definitions.

During the recitation of a class in reading in one of the pieces read the word "merchant" appeared.

"What is a merchant?" the teacher inquired after one of the children had read the word.

"A merchant is a tailor," answered one.

"A merchant is a man who keeps dry goods stores," said another.

"A merchant is a man what buys cheap and kin sell dear," remarked a third.

At last a little boy with a triumphant air cried out, "A merchant is a man what sells goods."

The teacher corrected none of these mistakes in language.—Dr. J. M. Rice in Forum.

MORTGAGE ALE.

[First publication Dec. 1st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars ($300.00) which became due January 1st, 1892, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Robert J. Montague, mortgagee, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1891, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, A. D, 1891, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book 49 of mortgages, on page 417, and the said Robert J. Montague having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and there is now justly due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of one thousand thirty-seven dollars ($1,037), and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section thirty-one (31), in township one hundred and fifty (150), of Range forty-six (46), excepting therefrom the west three hundred feet which is platted into lots, and the railroad right of way of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company; also excepting that portion lying on the northeast side of said railroad and within five hundred feet of the centre line of Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to Crookston, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 14th day of January, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said morgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st, A. D. 1892.

ORDER FOR HEARING.

[First publication Dec. 1st. 1892.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA. County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 24th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Andrew Wardberg, deceased.

On receiving and filing the petition of Ed Wardberg, of the town of King, of the county of Polk, representing, among other things, that Andrew Wardberg, late of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1892, at the county of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Erick O. Knutson, granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said court, on Wednesday, the 28th day of December, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston, the 24th day of November, 1892.

C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

INSIDE THE LINES.

Nobody knew just why a fort had been put in that place. There was no chance for fighting anything except mosquitoes, yet there was a long line of fortifications, and an enfilade of pickets guarded the little town from which all the men had gone away.

If beauty of location had been a military requisite, the fort was certainly well planted. The earthworks ran near the edge of a high bluff, which rose almost perpendicularly from the strip of land bordering the brown river at its foot. On the other side Louisiana stretched away to the horizon line, level and green as a garden, and in the distance a bit of lake often caught some of the blueness of the sky and shone the gem of all this fair setting.

The boy who was lying on the edge of the bluff had no eyes for the distant view. Through an opening in the trees clinging to the sides of the hill he was gazing at the antics of a party of boys far below him. Close under the bluff lay a white, many pillared house, and stretching before and behind it were smooth spaces of lawn, long lines of clipped hedges and avenues of magnolias. Something in its sheltered position between the river and the bank had saved from destruction this estate, whose possessors had given it the fitting name of the Garden. It seemed like a vision of paradise to the eyes of the homesick boy who was gazing down into the enemy's country.

From the door of a rough house within the embankment two officers watched the boy. The elder, Colonel Denning, was the commanding officer of the fort.

"I am afraid I made a mistake when I brought my son down here," said the colonel. "He is almost desperate with loneliness. I was afraid of it, but it seemed too hard to leave him there after his mother died."

"I think you did right to bring him, colonel," said the younger man. "It's a good, quiet, healthy place, and after a while he will make friends with the men and be happier."

"I hope he will," said the colonel.

"I feel sure of it," rejoined the other. "Just now he longs for the society of boys, but he is fighting against the inevitable. He has not philosophy enough to endure nor experience enough to understand the feeling these people have for everything inside these walls. Nothing could tempt one of these town boys to have any intercourse with him, and their scorn is rather hard to bear. I'm going to send George the Second to take him out on the river. He is an amusing little beggar, and will not make such a bad companion for Will when he gets used to his color and his ways."

A few minutes later two boys were swinging themselves down the face of the bluff. Will's companion was a slim, limber jointed little black boy, whose movements suggested a jumping jack, and his bearing showed the pride he felt as Will's guide.

Holding now by a tough root, now by the smooth stem of a blackjack vine, digging their heels into the soft soil and slipping perilously forward, they presently struck into a well worn cowpath, which led by easy stages to the foot of the hill.

Beyond the road which led to the Garden lay huge stranded logs, through which they picked their way out upon a sandy strip of beach, where an ancient skiff was tied to a raft. There was a little water in the boat, and a huge gourd was at hand as a means of defense against further leaking. Two clumsy oars furnished employment for both boys, and once launched their strength was tried by the current, which came swirling around the promontory of rotting bark which served as a breakwater.

But sturdy boyish muscles were at work, and the old boat was pushed slowly up the shore, keeping in with the eddy, and nosing her way through anchored snags of driftwood and up into more open water away from the shore.

Drawing a long breath, Will paused for a minute and said: "Let's go over to the island we see from the fort—the Towhead, I mean. Where is it, anyhow? I'm completely turned around."

"Hit's right ovah yander where you see de cottonwoods an de san'bar," said George. "Dis yer is de corral. Heap er cullud folks lives yer, but hit's drappin in de water mighty fas'. Dat beach tree a swishin up an down in dat bend useter grow in Unc' Jake's yard."

On the shore of the bend George pointed out the grim sight of an old burying ground, upon whose precincts the current of the Mississippi was rapidly encroaching. Will shuddered, and, with quick intuition, George turned the boat's head away from the bend and pointed across the current to the Towhead, which was now below them.

When the island first pushed its white, sandy head through the water some cottonwood seed had landed there from an airy voyage, and the young trees that sprang from them formed the nucleus of an aftergrowth which was added year by year like the rings of a tree. The innermost growth was now composed of tall young trees, but the thicket terraced down until near the water there was none but low thick bushes of last year's growth. A long tongue of sand extended like the tail of a comet down the river. Upon this the boys beached the boat, and then stretched their legs on the soft, warm sand.

"I'ze skeered er dis yer Towhead," said George. "Hit's haunted. A ole flatboat man useter live up in yander, where you sees dat black spot 'mon'st de trees. De ole boat washed agroun one night in high water, an de old man nebber made no monst'ous 'tempt fer to git out. He was onsociable like, an liked hisse'f mighty well. He live yer kinder quiet, an folks done got de notion dat he hab heaps er money. An one night somebody done kill 'im an tuk all he hed. Since dat time his ghos' done walk dis Towhead. On'y jes' yisterd'y Unc' Jake 'lowed he done seen dat ole ghos' an he 'lowed he gwine come yer no mo'! I ain' had much 'pinion er Unc' Jake lately, but I'ze jes' about as nigh dat ole boat as I keers to go."

"Well, I'm going to have a look at the old shanty," said Will, rising from the sand. His companion did not venture to follow him in the expedition.

The river had year by year added to the strip of land, and the old flatboat was now nearly hidden by the underbrush that had grown up between it and the water. The low hut which had once been the boat's cabin was still standing amid the decayed timbers of the hull, and Will noticed with surprise that there were traces of something like footprints leading to it.

Nevertheless he stepped quite unsuspiciously over the doorway. Once fairly within he felt himself roughly grasped by the arms from behind.

"You make a noise to call that boy," said a voice close to his ears, "and I'll kill you! I tell you I will never be taken prisoner!"

The person who had seized him now faced him, still holding him by the arms. Will saw a youth scarcely older than himself dressed in a worn gray uniform. His grip was like steel, but his face was so pinched and drawn and his eyes so desperately miserable that the heart of his captive warmed to him.

Recovering his composure a little, after his first astonishment and alarm, Will said, with an effort to laugh: "Let me go! I'm the only prisoner there's likely to be. I'm not after you. I was only looking for a ghost."

"Who are you? I know all the boys over there, and I know you are a Yankee by your cap and your voice. I tell you I can't be taken."

"See here," said Will, "I'm only a boy like you, and though I'm a soldier's son, and I don't deny either my voice or my cap, I don't want to harm you at all. What is up, anyway, and why are you playing spook on this strip of sand?"

"It is all up now, I suppose, and I may as well tell you all about it. Have you got a mother? I see by your face you haven't; so perhaps you will be sorry for a poor fellow who is going to lose his.

"My name is John Prescott, and over there in that white house below your fort my mother is dying, and I am trying to see her once more if she isn't gone already.

"I got a two weeks' furlough—you needn't stare, I've been in the army nearly a year—and slipped down the river two days ago. Unfortunately for me I made this point too near daylight yesterday morning to venture any farther. I knew the reputation this place has among the negroes, and I thought it safe to wait here until night. I reckon I was too tired and sleepy and didn't make it fast, and the boat managed to slip away while I was looking for a good place to drag it up among the bushes.

"Here I have been ever since, like a rat in a trap. I have watched the house over there for two days, and have even seen the family on the terraces and dared not make a signal! Now, sir, what are you going to do about it?"

"I'm going to do this," said Will, holding out his hand. "I'm going to say I believe every word you say, and I want you to trust me to help you out of this scrape. I lost my mother not six months ago, and I do know how to feel for you, if we are on opposite sides. I happened to hear today that your mother is no worse. Maybe you'll see her more than this once."

"But how can I get over?"

"I don't see quite clearly how to do it, but I'll get you over there before daybreak somehow. You must give me your word to go away when the time is up. Now I must go, or that boy's curiosity will be enough to overcome his fears, and he'll come to look me up. I know you're hungry, so take my lunch. Keep a sharp lookout after dark."

The lumbering skiff carried a very silent passenger back across the river. George ventured to inquire if Will had "seed de ghos'," and was answered so gravely in the affirmative that he then and there laid the foundations for several marvelous tales with which to astonish future audiences.

Will knew quite well that the thing he had in mind to do was a very delicate and difficult thing to undertake. That he, the trusted son of the commander, should attempt to smuggle an enemy inside the lines was no light matter. The thought of it rested not lightly on his conscience, but a refusal to aid the poor fellow on the island to see his dying mother would have rested more heavily still.

At any rate he meant to do it, and by the time the skiff touched bottom at her landing his plan was formed. Making a careful survey of the landing, and noting the shortest route out to the open water, he dismissed his companion without ceremony. A few minutes' walk brought him to the big white gate of "The Garden." He summoned up all his courage and dignity and marched through the magnolia avenue.

His appearance was greeted with a consternation that was far from pleasing. His request to see Miss Prescott in private for a few moments seemed to freeze with terror the black maid in waiting, but after a brief delay he was shown into a bright, flowery little room, which had a delightfully feminine and welcome look to eyes long used to camp life.

But the slender girl who met him with the air of an offended duchess had no welcome in her look. Her manner was sadly chilling. Ten minutes later, however, she was holding his hand at the door and saying: "Mr. Denning, I never, never can thank you enough if you will do this! Mamma is a little better, and if she can see John for one hour it would do her more good than medicine. I will wait at the side gate for him, and he shall leave before daylight."

There were a few more hurried questions and replies, and then Will was climbing the hill to a still more difficult interview. A night pass was not an easy thing for which to ask his father, but he could not leave the fort without it. The colonel was a very quiet and somewhat stern man, and Will knew that the best way was the straightforward one. He made his request in the fewest words.

"I am almost a man, father," he said, after he had made his request, "and I want you to trust me now, as you have always done in small matters. I can't tell you about it now, but I am doing nothing wrong. I am only helping a poor fellow in great trouble. I know my mother would wish me to do it."

"I don't doubt the excellence of your intentions, Will," said his father. "You can be trusted, I know; but are you sure your heart has not the better of your head in this matter, and will get you into some scrape?"

"I give you my word of honor, sir, that in my circumstances I believe you would do just what I wish to do."

"Then here are your papers, and remember it is the commander of the fort as well as your father who trusts you."

Every leaf in the old cottonwood on the bank seemed to quiver as Will started on his lonely trip. The green band of light above the horizon had quite died away, and the river seemed blacker than the night. Things which were plain enough by daylight appeared mysterious and fearful now, and every huge black shadow around the boat seemed to contain an enemy.

It was not pleasant to think of the sunken snags an unfamiliar oarsman might encounter, nor was that ghastly bend just above, where the encroaching river cut far into the old cemetery, a cheering recollection.

"I will not think of it!" he said. "It must be nearly time for me to turn across to the Towhead. The current may carry me down a little, but I would rather pull for it than stay on this side and get the horrors!"

His sharp, short whistle was answered by a figure leaping aboard before the skiff had fairly touched the shore.

"I knew you would come," the young man said. "At dark Nina put a light in my window just as she used to when I was out late on the river, and I knew you had been there. Before we go any further tell me the name of the person I am trusting myself to."

"The trusting is not entirely on your side, Prescott. Do you know what it means when I tell you my name is Denning?"

"It means that if I play the rascal it would be worse for you to have helped me than for any one else. I see and I appreciate it."

"The only way in which I can settle it with my conscience is to consider you my prisoner on parole while you are inside the lines, and see you safely outside before I leave you."

"How about your picket?"

"Fortunately for you he is up at the old sawmill. He saw me, hailed me, and got the password as I went up. Lie low now as we go by. He knows me and will merely wonder what I am about."

As they were swinging inshore by a raft of decaying logs a suppressed voice called to them:

"John! It's Fred, and it's all right. You slip off here and cut for the side gate. Harry is there and Nina."

"Now, Prescott," said Will," "it's 10 o'clock and I give you until midnight. Goodby."

It was a long walk. Will never forgot those two hours alone on the great river at night. All sorts of doubts and misgivings came crowding into his mind as he listened to the mysterious noises of the night and the river. A bright constellation which he had watched at home seemed like the visit of a friend, as it came wheeling into sight over the hill. It cheered him not a little, but it was marching westward rapidly before the paroled prisoner returned.

"Nina's cedar skiff is just here," Prescott explained, as he came out promptly on time. "It is loaded with all I need for my journey. She has planned for everything, and you need only go half way with me, Denning. Your duty will be done then. Strike directly across, and miss your picket. We can make the Towhead by a hard pull on the other side—at least I can."

At daylight Will was in his father's room again.

"Is it all right, Will?"

"All right, father, and I am not sorry I went."

The talk of the town found the commandant's boy's intimacy with the Prescotts a nine days' wonder, and scoffed not a little at the Prescott boys. But the intimacy continued, to the secret amazement of Colonel Denning, and in after years ripened into the friendship of a lifetime.—Mary Stewart in Youth's Companion.

The Dumb Restaurateur.

Some years ago I was stopping in a western town. During the night a fire alarm was sounded and a crowd quickly gathered at the scene of the conflagration, which was in a building occupied by a grocer, the basement being used as a restaurant. The firemen soon had a stream of water playing on the burning building, which flooded the floor and soon began to trickle down to the restaurant below. The proprietor, who was asleep, was soon aroused by the confusion incident to a fire, and in a half dressed and half dazed condition rushed up the steps and into the street shouting at the top of his voice: "I can't speak! I can't speak!" The ludicrousness of the scene can better be imagined than described.—Detroit Free Press.

The Sensitive Turquoise.

The turquoise breaks on the death of its proprietor, and it changes color when he is ill. This last observation is perfectly true, and is certified to by all lapidaries. The same thing has been remarked of coral. "Not only do precious stones live," says Jerome Cardan, "but they are liable to get sick, to suffer from the infirmities of old age and at last to die."—Paris Figaro.

From a Single Barley Stalk.

Tests made under the auspices of the Royal Philosophical society with a single barley stalk unfolded wonders which but few have ever thought even possible. By steeping and watering that one plant with saltpeter dissolved in rain water they managed to produce 249 stalks and over 18,000 grains.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A TREASURED COAT.

IT WAS SLASHED BY WILKES BOOTH WHILE RUNNING AWAY.

The Coat Was Worn by the Leader of the Orchestra the Night Lincoln Was Assassinated—A New Story About an Historic Tragedy.

William Withers, Jr., is the quiet man who leads the ochestra at the California theater, and when not marshaling his musicians is writing music in his room at the Brooklyn hotel. He is so retiring that few can claim to know him well, although his musical genius has for thirty-five years given him standing among the composers and leaders of the country.

Mr. Withers is fifty-five years old now, yet looks to be not more than forty, and would appear even younger except for an episode that occurred on the evening of April 14, 1865, at Ford's theater in Washington. That evening Withers almost had the unpleasant distinction of being murdered by Wilkes Booth after the latter had fired the fatal shot at President Lincoln and was rushing madly from the stage to an entrance where a confederate had a horse in waiting.

Mr. Withers' most valued treasure is a dress coat, now in part destroyed by the mot' that corrupts all wool, but on the back of the coat can be plainly seen two clean cut slits, made with a sharp edge. One, high up, as though a stroke for the wearer's neck, had missed it by a little and descended upon the garment. The other cut, nearly over the center of the space under which the wearer's right shoulder blade would be, is longer but equally well defined, and made with the same sharp steel.

Wilkes Booth made both these slits, and the wonder is that his victim was not fatally slashed, instead of being only nicked through the upper cut.

The coat was new when Mr. Withers put it on to lead the orchestra on the occasion of Abraham Lincoln's visit to the play, but the coat has never been worn since, so great was the sentimental devotion of the musician to the great man who won for friends all who came to know him.

Every one knows the story of Lincoln's assassination while sitting in an upper box of Ford's theater enjoying "Our American Cousin," but few have learned what occurred just after Booth had fired the cowardly shot, because William Withers is the only man who can tell the story, and he does not often do it.

"When the fatal shot was fired," he says, "I thought some property man had fired a pistol. Just then I heard a heavy fall on the stage and the people began to yell: 'Hang him!' 'Lynch him!' 'Stop him!' and I saw a man running across the stage toward me. When he got near I saw his eyes were almost starting from his head and there was the most fearful expression on his face I ever saw.

"I recognized Wilkes Booth and at that instant he put down his head and came rushing on, saying: 'Let me pass! let me pass!'

"I was standing where I could not move much, the passage was so narrow. He came on and when he got near struck me with a bowie knife and kept saying. 'Let me pass!' I felt the cut and turned a little. Then he struck the knife into me again near the back of my neck and I fell. When I was down he rushed to the stage door, grasped the knob with both hands and dragged the door open. I saw 'Peanut' John standing outside holding a bay horse. Then Booth pulled the door shut.

"Very soon Detective Stewart ran over me and out of the door after Booth. The crowd came upon the stage and grabbed me and wanted to hang me right there, but some who knew me shouted that I was not the man. I was arrested, however, and taken to jail, when Mayor Wallack examined me.

"I thought I was severely cut, but when I took off my clothes I found that the knife had only pierced my clothing and cut the skin a little. The cuts were as clean as though a razor had made them, and I have never understood how I escaped. The knife was found in front of the patent office, where Booth had dropped it as he rode away after the murder.

"I had seen Booth before the show standing near the Tenth street entrance to the theater, and after the performance began saw him again standing against the rear wall of the parquet circle, and then noted that he had gone into the balcony. After President Lincoln came in Booth stole down the balcony until he could look through a hole that had been bored in the box door and locate the president exactly. Then he had opened the door a little, taken careful aim and fired the fatal shot. He burst through the box and jumped fourteen feet to the stage.

"It was such an experience as I never wish to have again. It made me sick for weeks, and I get excited now when I think of it. I taught little 'Tad' Lincoln to play the drum, and was always kindly treated by the president. The whole shooting and escape were done in a few seconds and unexpectedly. Booth had evidently made his plan carefully, and was prepared to resort to any means to avoid arrest. I keep that old coat now, and value it more than everything else I have."—San Francisco Examiner.

Satisfied with a Monarchy.

A schoolmaster was so enthusiastic over politics that he began to give lessons on them to his class. He did not get on very well at first, but at length the scholars began to have a tolerable idea of the subject.

"Now, Johnnie," the schoolmaster asked in the course of one lecture, "would you rather have a republic or the present form of government?"

"The present form of government," replied Johnnie.

"Why would you rather have the present form of government?"

"Because I shouldn't get a holiday on the queen's birthday if it was a republic."—London Tit-Bits.

The Great Rule of Life.

We have to be governed very largely by the analogies of nature whenever we venture into the realm of the possibilities and the unknown, and there is no analogy in nature of something being given for nothing. The seed has to push through the ground to find the sun; the tree has to draw its sap up from unseen sources to whirl forth its buds; the bud itself has to force its way through obstacles of bark and fiber; the bird has to build its nest with careful endeavor and many journeys ere it feels the little wings beneath its breast; the gold has to be mined, the precious stone dug from the matrix; the diamond has to undergo fierce processes of grinding and scouring before its facets shine like living light.

Struggle is the rule of life. Were it otherwise it would seem as though we might all of us have been put upon the planet in conditions of luxury and ease and eminence that would require no effort on our part, and leave us free for all the enjoyment the world affords. But what soft, untempered, worthless metal we should be in such case! It is the fire that tempers the steel; it is the hammer that welds it; the grinding, whirling stone that brings it to an edge.—Harper's Bazar.

A Poor Folk's Garden.

So early were collectors in California, and so universal was the interest felt in Europe over the new plants of the Pacific coast, that many trees of sequoias and other superb conifers were planted in the parks of England, France and Italy long before the discovery of gold. Wealthy Californians, as early as 1855, visiting Europe, were surprised to find how popular were the brilliant annuals, flowering shrubs, vines and trees of their own state. Returning they often urged neighbors to cultivate more of the native plants, but with little effect.

In Alameda county, a plain, uneducated Englishwoman of Lancashire yeoman stock was one of the first persons in all California to make a home garden of wild flowers from field and hill. I remember in my boyhood the passionate devotion that she showed to this pursuit.

"It do be the best land the sun ever shone on," she declared, "for poor folk to have a garden.—Charles H. Shinn in Century.

The Juice of the Papaw Tree.

In his "History of Barbados" Griffith Hughes mentions that the juice of the papaw tree is of so penetrating a nature that, if the unripe peeled fruit be boiled with the toughest old salted meat, it quickly makes it soft and tender. Kersten also tells us that boiling meat with the juice of the papaw is quite a common thing in Quito.

Captain S. P. Oliver, writing in Nature, July 10, 1879, says, "In Mauritius, where we lived principally on ration beef cut from the tough flesh of the Malagasy oxen, we were in the habit of hanging the ration under the leaves themselves, and if we were in a hurry for a very tender piece of fillet, our cook would wrap up the undercut of the sirloin in the leaves, when the newly killed meat would be as tender as if it had been hung for a considerable time."—Chambers' Journal.

A Baronet as a Constable.

Among the constables in the Royal Irish constabulary stationed at the depot in the Phenix park, Dublin, is Constable Sir Thomas Echlin, Bart. According to Debrett's baronetage the Echlin family is of ancient Scotch origin, and formerly possessed princely estates in Scotland, and also large domains in the counties of Kildare, Carlow, Dublin and Mayo. The third baronet dissipated a large portion of the family estates, and the fourth, fifth and sixth baronets managed to get through with the remainder. Then the present baronet found himself landless and entered the Royal Irish constabulary.—Yankee Blade.

The Giant's Organ.

One of the most interesting features of the Giant's causeway is "The Giant's Organ." This huge "instrument" consists of a group of pillars of various lengths set apart on the side of the main cliff. The larger columns being in the center and the smaller ones tapering off on either side, after the fashion of organ pipes, admirably sustain the idea which the name "Giant's organ" conveys.—St. Louis Republic.

Work Horses - - - and Mares.
FOR GOOD, SOLID WORK HORSES and MARES, go to
M. R. BROWN,
The old reliable dealer, who has sold horses in this county since 1878, and who is always on hand to make his guaranty good. Every man who ever sold horses here is ready (when he sells) to guaranty, but later, if you happen to want him to make his guaranty good you can't most always sometimes find him ready to make his recommend good. He handles only good young horses and has sold more than any dealer in the county. He is now prepared to supply the demand for good teams—he handles no other—and guaranty them just as recommended. Before you buy you will do well to call at

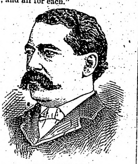
LABOR FEDERATION.

THE GREAT CONFERENCE TO TAKE PLACE AT PHILADELPHIA.

Delegates to Meet in Independence Hall Who Represent Over 600,000 Skilled Artisans—How Labor Has Demanded and Gained Recognition.

In that famous story known in the translation from the French as the "Three Guardsmen" Athos, Porthos, Aramis and their truculent country friend, D'Artagnan, entered into a compact that carried them through many desperate adventures. It was, "One for ıll, and all for each."

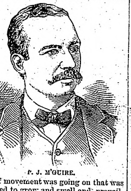


SAMUEL GOMPERS.

It can hardly be unfair to say that the ame sentiment that animated the spirits f the gallant soldiers of France now ills the souls of the intelligent workmen nd skilled mechanics of America. The truggle of labor in civilized countries as gone on through the centuries from he days when there were serfs and laves, lords and ladies, and the "son of he soil" wore an iron collar about his eck as a badge of dependence, while he chatelaine, "housewife" or mistress f the castle displayed on great occasions he gold beads and massive ornaments f precious metal that were the evidence f hard and unpaid toil on the part of assals.

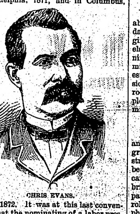
But it was not even at compulsion to o labor that the old time barons and obles called a halt. They demanded ot only support from their tenants, but lso the sacrifice of the most sacred ties f home and family. And right at that oint—after long waiting, to be sure—egan the revolt which led to the terri- e scenes of the Jacquerie, of Cade's erce irruption and of the French revo- ition.

These were instances of rage fierce ıt often impotent against the estab- shed order, but meanwhile another t of movement was going on that was stined to grow and swell and prevail, e the famous incoming tide in the y of Fundy.' It was a movement of ganization. It started among the tin l coal miners of England and Wales, o worked underground, and who ided together despite of laws regulat- wages and punishing all attempts to ate labor associations as treason and spiracy. And they went on and on, l the tide rose higher and higher, ept over the bar of opposition, gained inner harbor, and what the result is intelligent observer of the events of day l. of course noted.



P. J. M'GUIRE.

ll this is preliminary to a brief tch of the American Federation of or, which is to hold its twelfth an- l convention in Independence hall, ladelphia, beginning on the 12th of t month. An authorized statement ently issued from the national head- rters at 14 Clinton place, New York , says that on the 20th of August, , the year following the close of the , delegates from sixty labor organ- ions met in Baltimore and as a re- of their deliberations founded the ional Labor union. Subsequent con- tions of this body were held in Chi- , 1867; Pittsburg, 1868; New York , 1868; Chicago, 1869; Boston, 1870; adelphia, 1871, and in Columbus, 1872. It was at this last conven- that the nominating of a labor pres- ial ticket was followed by disinte- on.



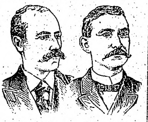
CHRIS EVANS.

e great financial crisis of 1873 ed the resources of the unions, and uspension of work decreased their bers. During this period of dark- and depression secret societies , but in abandoning the lines of ric evolution dissensions were in- ced.

length the old spirit revived, and 107 delegates, representing over a quarter of a million workers, met in Pittsburg on Nov. 15, 1881, and did not separate until they had established the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada. Many if not all of the ideas adopted in their political demands have since been taken up and presented by other organizations of labor. A legislative committee was appointed who presented several measures to congress, one important one—a national bureau of labor statistics—being finally secured in 1883.

At the convention of 1882, which was held at Cleveland, the industrial autonomy of each union was guaranteed by a solemn compact. The question of arbitration instead of strikes was the prominent topic at the New York conference in 1883. Next year at Chicago the agitation for the eight hour system was begun and continued at the fifth convention, which met at Washington.

It was at the sixth annual meeting, which gathered at Columbus, O., on Dec. 8, 1886, that the name of "American Federation of Labor" was definitely chosen. A constitution was adopted stating the main objects of the organization to be "the encouragement of formation of local unions and the closer federation of such societies through central trade and labor unions in every city, with the further combination of these bodies into state, territorial and provincial organizations, to secure legislation in the interests of the working masses; the establishment of national and international trades unions based upon a strict recognition of the autonomy of each trade, and the promotion and advancement of such bodies, and the aiding and encouragement of the labor press of America."



J. B. LENNON. W. A. CARNEY.

And so the movement went on, growing like a gigantic snowball, until when the tenth convention met at Detroit in December, 1890, the report showed over 600,000 members who had stood by each other through 1,168 strikes. Of these 989 had been won, 98 were compromised and 76 lost. The net result of the battles up to that time had been an advance in wages of from 7 to 25 per cent.

The eleventh annual convention was held in Birmingham, Ala., the first time in the history of the general labor movement that one of its meetings had been held in the south. The influences, so the officers say, were vastly beneficial to organization in that section of the country. It was resolved to test the constitutionality of the conspiracy laws and the rights of the courts to issue writs of injunction on wage workers charged with no offense against the law, but engaged in a contest with their employers. An investigation of the "sweating" system and the abolition of this social crime were demanded at the hands of congress. Renewed pledges to attain the eight hour workday were made and action taken for its enforcement. Protests against convict labor coming in conflict with free labor were entered. Selection of organizers for woman's labor was authorized. The abolition of child labor was demanded, as well as legislation in the interest of labor.

Among the well known men holding prominent positions in the federation are Samuel Gompers, the president; P. J. McGuire, the first vice president; Chris Evans, the talented and active secretary; William A. Carney, the second vice president, and John B. Lennon, the treasurer, who has handled the funds with faithfulness and financial ability.

GEORGE BAVARD.

A Noted Chef.

There recently died in the city of Berlin Louis Gaidan. Apoplexy carried him off. Gaidan was a notable in his way. He was for many years the "chef de cuisine" for Emperor William I. Gaidan was a native of Nimes and was sixty years old. He entered the service of the late emperor at the time of his accession to the throne and was his faithful adherent to the last. Gaidan until recently possessed a snug fortune, saved from his salary and perquisites, but he invested it in a business venture in Berlin and lost it all.

Curious Facts About Dancing.

An average waltz takes a dancer over about three-quarters of a mile; a square dance makes him cover half a mile. A girl with a well filled programme travels thus in one evening: Twelve waltzes, nine miles; four other dances at a half mile apiece, which is hardly a fairly big estimate, two miles more; the intermission stroll and the trips to the dressing room to renovate her gown and complexion, half a mile; grand total, 11½ miles.

Guatemala's Railroad Boom.

In the republic of Guatemala there is an active demand for railroad and telegraph supplies growing out of the construction of railroads, and requests have been made for a catalogue of American manufacturers of locomotives, cars, bridges and machinery necessary for repairs and maintenance of tracks and rolling stock, as well as telegraph, telephone and other accessories for railroading.

A Land of Prehistoric Buildings.

Sardinia would be an ideal residence place for the person who has a penchant for conjuring up the things of the dim and misty past, for it contains no less than 3,000 prehistoric buildings. They are almost all in the fertile districts and built in groups, which are separated from one another by wide and generally barren places.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. CURED Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I SOON THOUSANDS GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results.

Miss Lizzie Zarracher spent her Thanksgiving at home.

Money to loan by R. R. V. Loan and Investment Company.

The good sleighing seems to have revived business very appreciably.

The most of our attorneys attended court at Warren last week. A very short term was held.

Capt. Zarracher, who has been under the weather for a few days is complaining of feeling better.

And next month the legislature will begin its weary grind which will continue for about three months.

Money on good farms. Red River Valley Loan and Investment company. Offices in Bjoin block, Crookston, Minn.

Martin Benson, of Knute township, a brother of Judge Benson, came in last Friday and bought a span of horses from A. K. Austin.

When you want a good photograph of yourself. go to P. E. Lynne's new gallery in the Anderson-Olson block—second floor.

Ladies, we would cordially invite an inspection of our fall and winter cloaks when preparing for cold weather. Prices to suit the times.
A. Sture.

Comrade Synder left for the woods on Tuesday morning where he is getting out a large lot of wood this winter. He figures on putting in 1000 cords at least.

Grand closing out sale of jewelry watches, clocks and silverware at A. D. Morris store on Robert street. Remember, anything you want in jewelry you can get at a bargain.

A. Sture calls attention to his full and complete stock of dry goods and groceries and invites our readers to call and look him over. A little money will buy lots of goods at Sture's.

The Shunk-Calhoun opera company had a very good house and the entertainment was highly enjoyed. While it is a good company we do not see wherein it excells the old Calhoun opera company.

Ben Hayes, formerly of the Great Northern dining car service, and at one time cook in the Hotel Helena, Helena, Montana, is now engaged as cook at the Commercial, and is giving excellent satisfaction to the traveling public and the boarders generally.

A heavy snow fell on Friday of last week which sent the cutters flying about the city in great style and brought the much needed sleighing for hauling hay and wood. Appearances indicate an abundance of snow for the winter which is said to insure good crops the ensuing year.

One of Tom Bjoin's teams was so glad, on Monday morning to find that the earth had not been knocked into an unrecognizable mass that they took a bit of a hop skip and jump colliding with a sleigh loaded with bran standing in front of John Scheffer's barn. The load was upset and one of the horses was thrown down upon the sidewalk but got out of the spree uninjured.

Thanksgiving day was observed in our city very much after the old-fashioned approved styles. Union services were held at the Baptist church Rev. Squier preaching a very acceptable sermon after which our citizens proceeded to enjoy their Thanksgiving dinner. About four o'clock the stylish rigs began to appear upon the streets and for several hours the fun was continued without hindrance.

In order that I may be able to commence and succeed with the erection of my store building on the corner of Broadway and Second street, I have decided to sacrifice my stock of jewelry, watches, clocks, silverware, etc., etc., regardless of cost or value. Every article suitable for Christmas presents.
C. H. Saake, the Jeweler.

The Red River Valley Elevator company, in their new location, between Third and Fourth streets, are now prepared to buy or ship for farmers, at reasonable rates, their wheat or other grain. Mr. Wm. Munch, their representative here for the last five years, is still with them and requests all his old friends and patrons to call on him in his new place of business. All others he would ask to give him a trial.

Do you want a reliable time-keeper? See what Tom Morris can do for you.

Now fully ready for the holiday trade with a full stock of every thing to be present in a first-class jewelry store. Tom Morris the jeweler.

Attend the great fire sale now going on at Williams & Roberts' store in the opera block, and you will get some of the greatest bargains you ever heard of. Their stock was only damaged by water and a great deal of it is practically as good as new, but everything must be sacrificed or given away in 30 days.

Frank Benoit was in the city for two days last week.

J. W. Kelley moved in from Mentor last week to spend the winter in the city.

Mrs. C. E. Dampier returned last week from a visit to relatives in St. Paul.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Fontaine served Thanksgiving dinner to the clerks in Fontaine & Anglim's store and their families.

Register of deeds elect, John Amundson was summoned to Wisconsin last week on account of the death of a sister.

Order your wood of Priester & Co., and they will saw and deliver it for you cheaper than you can get it done any other way.

Shoes, shoes, all kinds, latest styles, lowest prices. A. Sture,
Opera Block.

Go to the fire sale of Williams & Roberts for big bargains in clothing and dry goods.

Hardwood chamber suits at from $16 to $60 dollars, at I. U. Jennings' furniture store.

Blankets, blankets, all the way from $1 up to $6.50—beauties—all wool—at A. Sture's.

Call at A. Sture's and secure one of those lovely flannel dress patterns, 54 inches wide, only 50 cents per yard.

Owing to his wife's contined illness A. D. Morris has decided to go out of the jewelry business in this city and offers his entire stock for sale at prices away down. Call early for choice. (28tf)

The street parade of the Uncle Tom's Cabin company on Saturday last was a good one. The company is a very good one, some of the actors being exceptionally strong. If the play itself was not so much of a chestnut the entertainment given on Saturday evening would have been very enjoyable.

Williams & Roberts intend to dispose of their entire stock of damaged goods within the next 30 days. These goods were only damaged by water and are practically as good as new. They have $16,000 worth of dry goods, clothing, underwear, boots, shoes, rubbers, etc,, and will dispose of them regardless of cost. Opera block, Crookston, Minn.

If you need anything in the line of watches, clocks, silverware or jewelry of any kinds, call on A. D. Morris' at his jewelry store and take advantage of his great closing out sale. They go without regard to cost to close out. It will pay you to bear this in mind and call.

Saake, the Robert street jeweler, has a full and complete stock to choose from, and can give as good bargains as can be had anywhere in the city. Try him.

Remember that A. Sture, in the opera house block is prepared to give great bargains for cash. A very little money buys stacks of goods of Sture. Try it once.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings can always be found at her old stand on Robert street ready to show you the latest and most approved styles of millinery and will sell at prices corresponding to the times.

Fontaine & Anglim are offering unheard of bargains in fall and winter clothing, as you will see by calling at their mammoth store and examining their stock. Anythihg you want at any price you want.

Soft easy shoes for tender feet, at The Fair.

Be sure to see what Sture can do for you before you purchase.

New furniture constantly arriving at I. U. Jennings' furniture store.

New millinery and new Japanese goods at Mrs. I. U. Jennings' millinery store.

A new invoice of picture frames just received at I. U. Jennings' furniture store, to be sold very cheap.

Buy where you can buy the cheapest. Saake's store is the place. All goods 20 per cent. cheaper than other dealers.

Newest styles in gold and gold front brooch pins, at Saake's.

Beautiful new goods, suitable for holiday presents, at Saake's jewelry store.

I. U. Jennings keeps every variety of furniture and guarantees to undersell them all.

If you are curious to know how far a dollar will go in dry goods, go to Sture's, opera block.

See A. D. Morris' ad and call at his store on Robert street for bargains in jewelry. He expects to leave Crookston about Nov. 15th, and will dispose of his stock regardless of cost. Now is the time to catch on while they go at any price.

Best sweat pads at 75 cents per set. Best farm harness from $25 to $27; everything else in proportion at my closing out sale.
H. L. Peake,
Main street, Crookston.

If you have a farm or city property to sell, list with Red River Valley Loan and Investment company.

Call and see L. I. Benoit in his new store.

Did you you see the meteoric showers Sunday night?

Joe Koelmet's little daughter has been dangerously ill this week.

Henry Burkhardt is improving rapidly. The senator is expected up this week.

Miss Olive Fortier has been engaged by L. I. Benoit as clerk in his new establishment on Broadway.

Hugh Thompson returned Monday from Duluth, where he han been looking after his mining interests.

Mrs. E. M. Walsh and Mrs. W. B. Dawley will entertain a number of their lady friends at cinch this afternoon.

The Jeffreys-Lewis company is highly spoken of by the press wherever the company has appeared.

Have you noticed Fontaine & Anglim's show window lately? George Fontaine, the decorator, has fairly outdone himself.

C. H. Saake is putting the old Chronicle office into habitable condition for winter. He expects to move it off the lot next spring.

Hard and soft wood in any quantity, sawed into stove lengths and delivered to any part of the city, by Priester & Co. Office and yard on Main street, next to the Germania hotel.

Unless your time isn't worth more than 10 cents an hour you cannot afford to saw your own wood, when you can get it sawed and delivered by Priester & Co., at prices that the "buck-saw" cannot compete with.

Tom Young's dray team got to feeling frisky on Thanksgiving day and ran from the depot to the opera house, under the impression, no doubt, that the Uncle Tom's company was holding a matinee there. By the way that team might be said to be in Uncle Tom's company all the year around.

Frank Barnum left on Saturday night for his home in Sauk Center accompanied by the best wishes of hosts of friends. Frank has done good faithful work while here (lacking a few days of one year) and he leaves lots of friends. We expect to see the Avalanche shine forth resplendent under Frank's management.

L. I. Benoit, having got fairly domiciled in his new quarters now invites all Journal readers to call and see him when they desire to purchase new fresh groceries at bedrock prices. Mr. Benoit has spared neither pains nor expense to place his establishment in the front ranks and he is determined to keep it there if good business methods, promptness and attention can do it.

That is a fine little place Johnny has fixed up in the Central house barn, but while it is all fine and cosy for himself it looks like a fire-trap for his neighbors with the stove pipe sticking up through the roof—no chimney. Moreover, it strikes us that it is right in the charmed circle of those celebrated "fire-limits." Wonder if the powers that be are all asleep that such fire-traps are allowed to flourish without a protest!

As a life preserver Will Lanctot proved himself a great success on Friday. As he was going to the bank he saw a team running away with a load of cordwood, and the driver vainly trying to check their flight. Will rushed in, caught the team and rescued the driver from the flying cordwood sticks, which were filling the air worse nor the meteors that you read about but never see.

That meteoric show, that was advertised for Crookston on Sunday evening failed to put in an appearance. We learn that Columbus was ready to open the opera house providing that enough reserved seats were sold to guarantee expenses but up to a late hour on Sunday no tickets had been taken so the house was not opened, although Columbus had received no notice that the show would not arrive as advertised. We have heard it said before that Crookston is no show town but this is the only evidence we have ever seen.

They tell a good story on a certain dominie in this city, and of course our informant told us "not to tell!" It seems that this good minister's mother-in-law arose in the stilly watches of the night, on Sunday night, looked out into the starry firmament and beholding the comet in all its fiery splendor straightway summoned the family to gaze upon the beauteous harbinger. After gazing for an hour or so and bringing to bear upon the subject the united astronomical lore of the family, the minister took a more practical view of the awe-inspiring spectacle than had yet obtained, and observed: "It looks as though it might be the reflection from an electric light!" and lo and behold investigation proved that the dominie had solved the problem and the family quietly retired to rest and pleasant dreams, deciding not to mention it.

Joe Hoch has been on the sick list since Thanksgiving day. Rheumatism.

Tuesday was one of those warm, pleasant days that we read of and everybody within a radius of ten miles from the city seemed to improve it by coming to the city to trade.

T. B. McManus, who has been laid up for a couple of weeks with inflamation of the bowels, was able to be out again Tuesday. He had a severe attack and is still weak from the effects.

Ulric Beaudoin begs leave to announce that he has opened the only shop in this city exclusively for the repairing and clearing of clothing. Castaway garments, unless absolutely worn out, made to look as well as new. Trial order solicited. One door south of Medical Hall.

The landlord at the Germania hotel has been having a good deal of trouble with the water from the broken sewer flooding his kitchen and dinning room which is in the basement, to such an extent that he has had to move up to the next floor. The disaster to the sewer bids fair to be a serious affair for the city unless a remedy is devised very soon.

Herb Newland did not confine his Thanksgiving to one day last week, but was at it every day and night—all owing to a felon of hugh proportions that engaged board and lodging on Herb's hand. Herb proved himself a royal entertainer—even sitting up nights to entertain the thing. Oh, he took excellent care of the thing, you may depend.

Nell Crawford was in from Red Lake Falls on Tuesday and made the Journal happy by one more paid up subscription. Mr. C. said that they were anticipating the arrival of the Great Northern road which is now completed to within a mile of the city and the bridges nearly completed. They expected that the last one would be completed by Tuesday night or Wednesday.

Somebody was mean enough to go into G. A. R. hall and steal the electric business. Words fail us in which to express our opinion of such a sneak—we believe he would be mean enough to take a newspaper from the office for a term of years and then, when the bill was sent him sneak the paper back to the office with "not wanted" on it, and a man who will do that hasn't a soul as big as a louse—he would steal a burner, though!

Sometimes a policeman runs afoul of a circumstance that makes him wish he had no star on for about a minute, and that's what happened to Dave Robinson on Monday evening when he heard that a rather fresh drummer had made an insulting remark to a lady. Dave gave the fellow the worse tongue lashing he ever got, but managed to control himself sufficiently to refrain from knocking him down, though how he could under the circumstances is a mystery. The fellow was very mealy-mouthed, claiming that a mistake had been made, that he did not mean to insult the lady and all that stuff, but the circumstances indicated otherwise and a good healthy knockdown would have been about the size of the punishment he deserved and would no doubt have got only for that star on Dave's coat. We reckon most any jury would have overlooked the star if Dave had proceeded to administer deserved justice.

Three smart alecks caused a disturbance at the opera house on Saturday evening by loud talking and spitting tobacco juice all over in their immediate neighborhood. After enduring the nuisance until patience ceased to be a virtue complaint was made to assistant manager Lent who reprimanded the smarties and then detailed a policeman to see that they respect the rights of others in the house. Some people seem to think the price of a ticket entitles them to make themselves a nuisance and disturb the whole house, but Lent says they will find out their mistake. What they do purchase is the right to see and hear and they are not supposed to take an active part in the show itself nor even to furnish a very poor side-show. All the management requires is gentlemanly treatment from the audience and this will be insisted upon.

It is rumored—and seems to be more substantial than some rumors, that the Great Northern road will be extended from Fosston to Duluth some day in the near future. The Journal has always prophesied that Mr. Hill would build that line if no other line was completed before the Great Northern reached the Pacific coast. While it might be better to have a competing line, this line extended to Duluth will be of immense advantage to Polk county and to Crookston; as it would furnish us cheaper freight rates to and from Duluth, which is our natural market and trading point. The item of coal alone would be a great consideration to say nothing of heavy and bulky machinery that now has to reach us by all rail route. This road would also open up immense forests of hard wood, furnishing an abundance of cheap fuel for the settlers upon the prairies. By all means let us have the road.

The Times of Tuesday says: "Iver Krohn and wife were up from Valley attending to some business affairs," all of which was a complete surprise to Mr. Krohn's many friends in this city as well as to Iver himself, being that he has no wife.

Iver Krohn paid the Journal a pleasant call on Wednesday to chat about old times and leaves us the wherewithal to send the paper to him at Rindal for another year. From some hints he dropped, we should not wonder if Iver was contemplating matrimony in the near future.

James Lent, who for a year past has been connected with the opera house in this city, left on Wednesday evening for New York City to join a company there. Mr. Lent has done much to make the business of our opera house successful and his genial features will be missed by his many friends in the future. He thinks it may be that his company will visit Crookston some time next spring or summer. The Journal wishes Mr. Lent abundant success in the future.

Frank Gravel on one of his recent trips to Fosston was presented with a handsome gold headed cane by the fair association as a token of their appreciation of his services during the fair. Frank not only advertised the fair during his travels, but rendered valuable assistance during the fair. Frank is not only one of the most popular traveling men, but also one of the most accommodating, and the people of Fosston always appreciate a favor.

On Thursday, December 8th, the ladies and societies of the Congregational church of Crookston will hold an old-fashioned church fair at the Reading Room hall on Broadway. The fair will be opened at 2 p. m. and the sales will begin at once. The ladies have spared no pains to make it one of the finest of displays and sales of all kinds of useful and fancy articles for everybody. Of course the articles are in part the work of many of the leading ladies and artists of the city. The fair will be open from 2 to 10 p. m. An elaborate supper will be served at 6 p. m. At 8 p. m. there will be a grand free concert for an hour or so in which there will be fun enough for all. Buy your holiday presents at the fair and come early and get your choice.

A. D. Wishard: I just came in from Red Lake Falls. I think Marshall & Johnson out there have one of the finest flour mills in the country. It is a four-story building, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. It's a 300 barrel mill and they have a side track from the Northern Pacific to their mill. They have the finest waterpower in the county and they must have spent about $20,000 last summer improving their dam, etc. Contractor Foegleberg has just completed a 48-foot cut for the Great Northern Railway which has been built from St. Hilaire to Red Lake Falls. It was a very expensive job to put the railroad into Red Lake Falls, as there was two very large cuts to make and two streams to cross—the Red Lake and the Clearwater. The depot is finished and it is expected the cars will be run in next Saturday, December 3rd. Red Lake Falls has got some enterprising citizens, and I think it is bound to grow.

Mr. J. C. THE JUSTICE MILL.

The District Court Convened Monday, With Judge Powers on the Bench.

Eighty-five Cases on the Calendar and a Long term may be Expected.

A List of the calendar cases and the Disposition Made of Them.

The Indictments Which the Grand Jury Have Made up to Date.

Three Day's Business.

Last Monday, December 5, District Court convened in this city for the holding of its general term in and for Polk County.

In the absence of Judge Mills, who is busy at chambers finishing up on work before January 1st when his term expires, Judge Gorham Powers of Granite Falls presided on the bench. The usual officers and the local bar were in attendance. At 10 o'clock the sheriff rapped for order and formally opened court.

The first business transacted was the calling of the Grand Jury of which 20 members answered. Judge Powers thereupon charged them very carefully as to their duties and rights, especially requesting them to keep all their proceedings secret, and after appointing Ole Bang foreman, asked them to withdraw to their room and consider the matters that would come before them. The Grand Jury then retired in charge of officer George Holt.

After calling the roll of the Petit Jury to ascertain who were present, the jurors were excused until 1:30 p. m., and the court proceeded to the preliminary call of the calendar which now, with the appeal cases added, contains about 85 civil cases. How many criminal cases will come before the court can only be conjectured until the Grand Jury is discharged, but the outlook is that there will be a great number, probably 20 or 22. After the dinner hour, at 1:30 p. m. the court commenced "setting the calendar," i. e. setting each case for trial at a particular date; and this with the hearing of numerous motions, demurrers and petitions consumed the rest of the day.

As Judge Powers is only able to stay in this county until next Saturday only one week's business was "set" as follows:

For Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 6 and 7, Connery vs Burdick et al, Beauchaine vs McKinnon et al, Webb vs Fisher, Lambert vs Bank of Warren, Flakne vs Elder, and Walter A. Wood Co. vs Cornelius.

For Thursday, Dec 8: Smith vs Linden, J. I. Case Co. vs Gleason.

For Friday, Dec. 9: LaDue & Co. vs Watkins & Co., McClatchie & Lowe vs Bergeron et al.

For Saturday, Dec. 10: State of Minnesota vs St. P. M. & M. Ry. Co. This latter is a case to be tried by by the court, the other cases all being for the jury.

The probabilities are that next week will be almost entirely spent in the trial of criminal cases, the county attorney having given notice that he then wished to take up that branch of his duties.

The JOURNAL gives below an itemized record of the disposition of each case:

No. 1—Hoff vs. Harstad. Continued by consent of the parties.

No. 2—Ives vs. City of Crookston and others. Passed.

No. 3—E. P. Pierce vs. City of Crookston and others. Passed.

These two last are the cases brought to prevent the issuance of bonds by this city to the Duluth, Crookston & Northern railroad, and are for that reason also brought against the bond commissioners holding the bonds in escrow. As a similar case has been tried and confirmed in the supreme court, there is very slight probability of these cases ever coming up again. The decision referred to was against the railroad company.

No. 4—Erikson vs. Great Northern railway. Continued by consent.

No. 5—State vs. St. P., M. & M. R'y. To be tried by the court. This is a tax case and one of the few of that nature that have ever been brought on to trial.

No. 6—Minnesota Farmers' Live Stock association vs. Lafston. Already tried and submitted.

No. 7—Larne vs. Berg. Made No. 1 at the foot of the calendar.

No. 8—Foote vs. Reeves. Tried and submitted at former term.

No. 9—State vs. St. P., M. & M. R. R. For the court.

No. 10—Tvetekken vs. Minn. Loan & Trust Co. Dismissed by plaintiff.

No. 11—Connery vs. Nelson & Opheim. For the jury.

12—Beauchaine vs. McKinnon et al. Jury case.

13—Ives vs. Norcross. Court case.

14—Webb vs. Fisher. Jury case.

15—Lambert vs. Bank of Warren. Jury case.

16—Morin vs. Town of Sletten. Dismissed by plaintiff.

17—Land vs. Rude. Settled.

18—Flakne vs. Elder. Jury.

19—Wood Machine Co. vs Cornelius. Jury.

20—Smith vs Linden, Jury.

22—Reynolds vs Davis. Passed.

23—O'Brien & Co. vs Finderson. Passed.

24—Holberg vs N. P. R. R. Jury.

26—J. I. Case Co. vs Gleason. Continued.

27—Mallette vs Chempoux. Jury.

28—McClatchie vs Bergeron. Jury.

29—Hunt vs Pierce. Court case.

30—Sandwich Mfg. Co. vs Clements. Jury.

31—Childs vs N. P. R. R. Jury.

32—Nelson vs Teal.—Jury.

33—Nordrum vs Stovarp. Jury.

34—Clausen vs Simpson. Jury.

35—Cormonton vs Western Union. Settled.

36—Crookston Imp. Co. vs Marshall. Court.

37—Meline vs Driscoll. Jury.

38—LaDue vs Watkins. Jury.

39—Simpson vs Beck. Jury.

40—Rodman vs Wadekemper. Jury.

41—Sawyer as receiver vs Harrison. Court case, and set as No. 2 at the foot of the calendar.

42—Larson vs Fishbein. Jury.

43—Lemon vs Minneapolis & Northern Elevator company et al. Jury.

44—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York vs Eikhoff, Demurrer to be argued.

45—Skjegstad vs Hasselton. Demurrer.

46—Vine vs Austin. Jury.

47—Yellow Medicine County Bank vs Tagley et al. Jury.

48—Palen et al vs J. I. C. Machine Co. et al. Jury.

49—Stone et al vs Barron et al. Jury.

50—Sweate vs Vattinson. Jury.

51—Stuhr vs Osterloth. Jury.

52—Steenerson Myers vs Melland. Jury.

53—Hayes vs Pirath. Court.

54—Casmey vs McGory, Jury.

55—Beaucheune vs Chabot. Jury.

56—Sprague vs Nelson and Opheim. Passed.

57—Gilbert vs Erikson. To be tried by referee by agreement of parties.

58—Bishoff vs Bray. Jury.

59—Greenhalgh et al vs Simpson. Jury.

60—Bearns vs Chilback. Jury.

61—Scully vs Town of Gentilly. Set as No. 3 at the foot of the calendar.

62—Pari vs Pari. Divorce; for the court.

63—Kalle vs Halvorson et al. Jury,

64—Application of Petra Sampson to vacate townsite. Court.

65—Beaudoin vs Munn Bros. Jury.

66—Rhinehart vs Anderson. Stricken from the calendar by agreement.

67—Johnson & Co. vs Vaule et al. Jury.

68—Winchester vs Melloh. Jury.

69—Johnson & Co. vs Dahl et al. Court.

The above were all cases on the printed calendar. There were 27 cases on appeal from justice court which were put on the calendar by motion to that effect, but no disposition was made of them.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6.

The case of Connery against Burdick and Nelson and Opheim resulted in the court directing the jury to bring in a verdict in favor of Connery and against Burdick; as to Nelson and Opheim the case was dismissed by the court. This case was one of the common kind—a constable levying on somebody else's property.

The next case was an old acquaintance to those about the court—Beauchaine vs McKinnon and others was called for its third trial. Once the jury rendered too large a verdict, it was accepted and reduced; but as the case was then against John Patterson as sheriff nothing could be collected on the judgment against him. When he left this part of the country the action was brought on his official bond against the sureties, was tried at the last May term and the jury then disagreed.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 7th.

At the time of going to press the case had just been argued by the attorneys and the court thereupon adjourned. It is impossible to guess at the outcome.

Up to Wednesday evening the grand jury had returned the following indictments:

John Elder, assault 1st degree.

Alfred J. Mortimer and August Nelson, burglary 3d degree.

Con Davis, assault 1st degree.

Wm. Graham, grand larceny 2d degree.

James Marray, assault 1st degree.

John Wayne, burglary 3d degree.

COURT CALLINGS.

Judge Powers is a very pleasant as well as a learned gentleman. The bar would be glad to have him stay during the whole term.

It will soon be necessary to have a new court house, the old one is much too small for the proper transaction of business.

When the new jail is finished the jailbirds will be better housed than the jurors while deliberating on their verdicts.

Sheriff Grundysen went to Fergus Falls last night to liberate some discharged prisoners and bring some others up for arraighment.

A New Industry.

The JOURNAL has had occasion to refer to the new woodyard established in this city by Priester & Co., but the real magnitude of the concern has not before been mentioned. Instead of being a little one-horse affair, having a few cords of wood to sell maybe and maybe not as the case might be, Priester & Co. will have constantly on hand good dry body wood sufficient for the requirements of this city, which they will deliver at your door either in cordwood lengths or sawed into stove-wood and split ready for use if you so desire it. Not only will they have a sufficient quantity of wood to meet the requirements of this city, but they are prepared to fill all orders for all villages along the Great Northern road as well as to supply every farmer on the prairies. As soon as they get fairly to running their stock of wood will embrace thousands of cords which will enable them to meet any requirements. They keep a force of eight or ten men busy sawing, splitting and delivering wood. In addition to their wood business they have added a for grinding feed, which they are prepared to do with promptness and at rates that cannot be discounted. They have put up a set of scales and will weigh in the grain and weigh out the feed so that farmers can see that they get their full weight in every case. The institution throughout will be run on strictly business principles and by so doing Priester & Co. hope to merit and receive the patronage of an appreciative public. Give them a trial order.

Fosston Ripples.

E. D. Childs, W. E. Kelsey and Gilbert Walker, were in town several days last week.

A trio of our legal lights, B. S. Bennett, W. H. Averill and O. J. Vaule are at the county seat attending court.

Andrew Eaton arrived home on Thursday after an extensive and profitable season in Dakota.

Miss Berg, a teacher from Thief River Falls, visited in town last week a guest of Miss Akre.

Two of our teachers, Miss Akre and Miss Mark, spent Thanksgiving in Crookston, visiting relatives of the former.

A brief write-up of our village, accompanied by a cut of the new school building, appears in the December number of School Education.

Father Fiege of Lambert, accompanied by several Catholics of this vicinity were looking the ground over to select a suitable site for a church of their denomination, which they feel assured will be built in the near future.

None of our local democrats seem to have any aspiration for the post office, although there is an eight hundred dollar salary attached to the honors. But then, it is early yet.

The following parties from Red Lake Falls dined with Col. Sutor, of the Commercial, on their way to the lumber camps: Joe Marco, Wm. Hillgrove, Matt Coad, P. Grandbois, Pat Glynn, Joe Schusser and Horace Gervais.

The little lake north of town has been cleared of snow and fitted in proper shape for a rink, not so much for the benefit of the public as for the purpose of keeping our local experts in proper trim.

Our popular machine agent, Oscar Olson, was agreeably surprised a few days since on receipt of a handsome fur coat labeled: "Compliments of Larsen, Carpenter & Co." Oscar is a first-class business man, and the firm appreciate his services.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION,

A Good Attendance and a Profitable Meeting Enjoyed.

The Crookston sub-district of the Fergus Falls District Epsworth League convention which met in our city last Thursday and Friday, was quite well attended from abroad and proved a very interesting and profitable meeting The sessions were held in the First Methodist Episcopal church, beginning Thursday evening, with Rev. L. W. Squier of this city, as president, and Mrs. S. S. Farley, of Warren, as secretary. The address of welcome was delivered by J. W. Wheeler on behalf of the Crookston Epworth League and A. M. Childs on behalf of the Methodist Social Union. Impromptu responses were given by Rev. S. S. Farley of Warren, and Rev. Geo. Willett of Thief River Falls. The interest of the association was heightened by a very appropriate and inspiring recitation delivered by Miss Nellie Twombly of Warren, entitled "The Changed Word." After these opening exercises, refreshments were served in the lecture room of the church by Crookston Chapter, No. 4,000, and the evening closed in the enjoyment of hearty social fellowship.

On Friday, besides the ordinary routine business of the convention, the following literary program was carried out: "Our Pledge," by Rev. Geo. Willett of Thief River Falls; "Objects and Aims of the League," by Mrs. C. A. Bradley of Warren; "How can Bible study be most effectively directed in the League," Rev. Thomas Billing, Fisher; "What can the League do for Temperance?" Mr. Chris. Houston, Crookston; "The Literary Department," Mr. C. A. Bradley, Warren; Review of Ferguson's "Practical Hints on Junior League Work," Mrs. A. C. Wilkinson, Crookston; "The League and Charity," Miss Nellie M. Hunt, Crookston; 'What Amusements are Allowable," Miss Ada A. Ridge, Crookston; "Our Motto," Miss Ada Johnson, Crookston. General discussion followed most of these papers; that following "The Literary Department," and "What Amusements are Allowable" was full of sprightliness and pluck, though through it all the kindest spirit prevailed. Helpful experiences were detailed and many valuable suggestions with regard to the literary culture and social pastimes of the religious young people of the Northwest was presented.

Friday evening the church was well filled by young people and their friends to greet the Rev. M. V. B. Knox, D. D., president of Red River Valley University, of Wahpeton, N. D. The subject of Dr. Knox's lecture was "Do and Don't." It was a strong and beautiful arranging of the things which young people must do and the things which they must avoid, in order to cultivate the best character and so reach success in the business of life. The lecture was enlivened by anecdotes and wit, and made a most pleasing and deep impression on the minds of those who heard it.

After the lecture the convention stood adjourned, to meet next spring in Warren.

John Cromb appeared at the bank on Monday morning, "slightly disfigured yet still in the ring" all owing to a bit of a runaway scrape that he indulged in with Felix Fournet on Sunday. They were enjoying a sleigh-ride when the horse took a notion to run away and did so first distributing the gentlemen all over the sidewalk scratching and bruising them up in great shape.

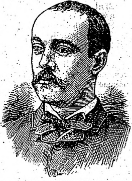
ABOUT DICK AND TOM.

OTHERWISE RICHARD K. MUNKITTRICK AND THOMAS L. MASSON.

They Are Both Splendid Fellows Personally and Have Written Rhymes That Appeal to the Hearts and the Funny Bones of the American People.

The names of Tom Masson and R. K. Munkittrick are familiar to all readers of current literature, and both have suffered for their names. The new proofreader too often insists on making the former into Mr. "Mason," and the great majority of those not personally acquainted with the latter assume that his signature is a nom de plume. It is painful to add that they often pronounce it Monkey-trick.



RICHARD K. MUNKITTRICK.

He is really and truly Mr. Munkittrick—Mun-kit-trick—very much Munkittrick indeed, for his father is a native of Ardee, Ireland. His mother is of American birth, and he was born March 5, 1853, in Manchester, England, but was brought to the United States in infancy. Of himself he says: "Descended from a race of clergymen and drunkards, I am a natural born lotus eater. Would rather loaf a week than work an hour. Have been hammering a living out of writing since 1876. Am married, and my family consists of one wife, one child and one dog. Live in New Jersey."

If his confession be true that he does not like to work, it is fortunate for the reading world that he still has to, for he gives us a deal of gently delicious humor. He works hard, and yet has the art which conceals art, for his humor seems perfectly spontaneous. It seems to be of the sort that bubbles up of itself, like the flow from a perennial spring. This is written of his prose. Most of his poetry appears to be in the sentimental style. It is chiefly of the lyric order, while his prose is rather pointedly epic—necessarily so, as it is humorous. A fair specimen of his use of nature's phases in poetry is shown in "An Etching:"

The meadows flame with goldenrod;
  White cloudlets fill the skies;
The thistledown along the sod
  In every zephyr flies.
The orchard trees serenely blow
  With apples red and ripe,
And in the wistful afterglow
  The quail begins to pipe.

Along the way the squirrel pranks,
  The sumachs brightly blaze,
And on the fading flower banks
  There is a veil of haze.
And, singing blithe and happy airs
  Through woodlands rustling brown,
September lightly walks and wears
  Her shining golden brown.

Tom Masson is still quite a young man, but has been a writer for six years. Before that he had a rare and valuable experience on the ocean, nor has his hand yet forgotten its cunning in seamanship, for he is an enthusiastic yachtsman and knows a sailing vessel in minutest detail from spanker to keelson. He was born in Essex, Conn., July 21, 1866, and his father being captain of a sailing vessel he passed most of his first twelve years on the ocean, visiting many foreign lands. He was then three years in school at New Haven and four years in business as a commercial traveler. Since 1886 he has been a writer, and the following pleasant skit entitled "His Light Put Out" is a fair specimen of his style:

He had worn a colored blazer on the Nile;
He had sported spats in Persia just for style;
With a necktie quite too utter, in the streets of old Calcutta he had stirred up quite a flutter for awhile.

THOMAS L. MASSON.

The maids of Java thronged before his door
Attracted by the trousers that he wore,
And his vest—a bosom ventor—shook Formosa to its center, and they hailed him as a mentor by the score.
On his own ground, as a "masher" on the street,
He outdid a Turkish pasha who stood treat;
He gave Shanghai girls the jumps, and their cheeks stuck out like mumps at the patent leather pumps on his feet.

But he called upon a Boston girl one night
With a necktie ready made—which wasn't right—
And she looked at him, this maid did, and he faded, and he faded, and he faded out of sight.

AS TO POSTAL AFFAIRS.

Postmaster General Wanamaker Sums Up the Work of His Office.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Postmaster General Wanamaker summarizes the results achieved by his department as follows:

Five million dollars added to the gross revenues; the deficit reduced nearly a million; money order offices increased two-thirds, or from 10,070 to 16,689; eighty-two cities supplied with free delivery; 2,790 new offices established; 263 offices advanced to the presidential grade; 1,590 new mail routes established, embracing 3,500 miles of new service; ocean mail service extended and pneumatic tubes service introduced.

In the last four years 5,403 new mail routes have been established, the number of postoffices has grown by over 8,600, the number of money order offices over 8,200, and the number of free delivery offices has almost doubled.

Penny Postage Question.

On the 1 cent postage question he says: "The present letter rate pays actually double the cost and this overpay serves as a protective rate to the department to cover the under pay from doing an express business for periodicals and books and carrying of advertising sheets at 1 cent per pound that in point of fact are nothing more than business circulars that load the mails enormously. All such mail is not only carried at a loss of 6 cents a pound, but it interferes materially with the business of the express and railroad companies, which are properly carriers of heavy packages and freight."

Something to take the place of fractional currency for the remittance of small sums is very desirable. He urges the issue of a money postal card of denominations of 10 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents and of $1 and of the form of the present small cards and exactly similar to the ordinary postal card, on the address side, and on the reverse side an order on the postmaster of the city addressed for a fixed sum payable on the signature of the payee named in the address.

His Ideal Service.

The report closes with the following: "My ideal for the American postal service is a system modeled upon a district plan, with fewer offices and those grouped around central offices and under thorough supervision. By this means at least 20,000 offices could be abandoned that produce nothing to the department. In the place of every abolished non-money order and non-registry office might be put an automatic stamp selling machine and a letter box to receive mail. With the money saved should be instituted a system of collection and delivery by mounted carriers, bicycles and star routes and messenger contractors, to gradually spread the free delivery all over the country."

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Annual Report of the Work Done in Secretary Noble's Domain.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The annual report of John W. Noble, secretary of the interior, has been given out. The volume of work accomplished during the present administration is shown to exceed that of any preceding period.

In the general land office on June 30, 1888, there were pending 350,953 final entries, and the accumulation steadily increasing. These have all been disposed of. During the present administration 398,128 agricultural patents have been issued against 162,754 in the preceding four years, representing an excess in acreage of 37,659,840 acres. The total quantity of public lands disposed of during the past year by cash sales and miscellaneous entries was 18,664,019 acres, and there was a total of cash receipts of $4,860,109.69. Agricultural patents were issued during the year to the extent of 15,420,800 acres, and patents on account of railroad land grants of 2,018,553 acres. Surveys of public lands for the year amounted to 12,717,493 acres.

The policy of making forest reserves in the Western states and territories has been greatly advanced during the past year. Six such reserves have been created by presidential proclamation, making an area of 3,252,260 acres. This policy will be further carried into effect and will be most beneficent and far reaching in its results. The secretary recommends that these forest preserves should receive protection from the army through watchmen or custodians, for whose compensation appropriations should be made, in order that they may be protected from fires and depredations. The secretary also treats of the system of irrigating arid lands and the benefits derived therefrom.

Indian Affairs.

Educational work among the Indians has been greatly increased and improved in efficiency. There has been an increase of over 13 per cent. in attendance of children in the schools, the total for 1892 being 19,798 scholars. New Indian reservation boarding schools have been established during the present administration and more are in progress which it is anticipated will be opened soon. Under the policy of Indian allotments negotiations with fourteen tribes, during the present administration, has resulted in the opening up for public settlement nearly 26,000,000 acres of land. Other negotiations which are pending will, when ratified, add 10,000,000 acres more.

The secretary discusses the census bureau, the Nicaragua canal, and the pension department, which have been reviewed in former reports of department heads.

Killed Four Carpenters.

DENVER, Dec. 6.—A freight train on the Burlington road broke in two at Corona, several miles west of this city, and a collision took place between the two parts, causing a bad wreck and killing four bridge carpenters. Their names could not be learned.

Always Equal to the Emergency.

No sooner does a man wish for something in the Railroad line than the Northern Pacific Railroad is on hand to furnish it. This time it is Canadian Winter Excursions. Upon November 29th, December 6th, and any day from December 13th to 22nd, and again on December 27th, any man or woman in North Dakota or Northern Minnesota can buy a round trip ticket to Montreal, good for 90 days, for only $40.

Any person living in Manitoba can do the same thing, on any day from November 28th to December 31st. By payment of very reasonable amounts extra, other trips can be added to this, and tickets extended. In addition to all this, the Northern Pacific will, in connection with the Wisconsin Central, run through Pullman Tourist Sleeping cars, on November 29th, December 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th, to connect with a special train, which will leave St. Paul upon arrival of Northern Pacific train in the morning, and run through to Chicago, by daylight, arriving there in time to connect with all trains for Canadian points leaving there that night.

This special train is for the sole pleasure and accommodation of the Canadian Winter Excursionists, has a parlor car attached, and the charge for berth in sleeping car and seat in parlor car to Chicago is only $2.00. This practically gives the Canadian Winter Tourist the earth, only he doesn't get it fenced in. By buying these winter excursion tickets, you get a fine opportunity to visit the world's fair grounds and buildings, and see what a wonderful place it is there. All information, maps, tickets etc., can be obtained of any agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, by either writing or calling personally.

Deaf for a Year
Caused by
Catarrh in the Head

Catarrh is a CONSTITUTIONAL disease, and requires a CONSTITUTIONAL REMEDY like Hood's Sarsaparilla to cure it. Read:

"Three years ago, as a result of catarrh, I entirely lost my hearing and was deaf for more than a year. I tried various things to cure it, and had several physicians attempt it, but no improvement was apparent. I could distinguish no sound. I was intending putting myself under the care of a specialist when some one suggested that possibly Hood's Sarsaparilla would do me some good. I began taking it without the expectation of any lasting help. To my surprise and great joy I found when I had taken three bottles that my hearing was returning. I kept on till I had taken three more. It is now over a year and I can hear perfectly well. I am troubled but very little with the catarrh. I consider this a remarkable case, and cordially recommend to all who have catarrh." HERMAN HICKS, 30 Carter Street, Rochester, N. Y.

FARM GARDEN

CHESS OR CHEAT.

A Troublesome Animal Which Is Connected with a Foolish Tradition.

The specimen of grass shown in the accompanying is chess or cheat, known to botanists by the name of Bromus secalinus, L. Some farmers still hold to the old tradition that chess is a degenerate wheat, but most now know it is a distinct species, which sometimes overruns grain fields. The seed is sometimes sown with the grain, but more often gets in from neglected fence corners or hedge rows. It is a very hardy, coarse plant, that seeds profusely and would soon overrun a field if not checked. It is an annual; hence careful cutting for one season would eradicate it.

The botanist of the Maine state experiment station says of it: "It is of no value to the farmers of Maine, though it has been suggested as a winter grass for the south, where some of its near relatives are esteemed. It is rather to be regarded as a weed and should be destroyed. It is not a native grass, but was introduced from Europe. It may be recognized by the aid of the accompanying cut and the following description: Flowering glume oblong, convex on the back; flowers lapping over one another before expanding; lower empty glume distinctly 3-5 nerved, the upper 5-9 nerved, annual; panicle spreading, even in fruit, the drooping peduncles little branched; spikelets oblong ovate, turgid, smooth, of 8-10 flowers; glume rather longer than the palet, short awned or awnless; sheaths nearly glabrous. Growing in fields or waste places as though introduced."

Moths in Beehives.

W. F. Clark, of Guelph, Ont., cites as a strong point in favor of Italian bees that they are rarely troubled by moths, and even a moderately strong colony of this race will clean them out most effectually. If through carelessness and neglect on the part of the beekeeper a colony has become moth infested, the bees and any combs not affected should be transferred to another hive, after which the old hive should be well sulphured; then by giving one or two at a time of the moth eaten combs to strong stocks of bees, after killing any pupa that may be in sight they will be cleansed and used. The enfeebled colony may be strengthened by giving it frames of brood, and if necessary a good young, vigorous queen. It may be added that moths and other evils in beekeeping may be warded off by heeding Father Langstroth's maxim, "Keep all colonies strong."

Seed Potatoes.

The best way to keep seed potatoes, according to an English authority, is after thoroughly drying them in an open shed, to pack the tubers in shallow boxes in single layers crown upward. The boxes can be so made that they can be packed one upon the other in any light building secure from frost, and when the planting season comes round each tuber will be provided with one strong green spur shooting out from its main crown eye. And this is the condition in which potatoes, especially those intended for an early crop, should be planted.

Temperature for Churning.

At a New York state dairy school cream was churned at 68 degs. in fifteen minutes. It had been raised in a Cooley creamer, in ice water at about 40 degs., in twelve hours and ripened at 66 degs. or thereabout in twenty-four hours. The temperature at the separation point was 69 degs. The butter maker who usually churns that cream said that he churned his cream at 65 degs. and was an hour to an hour and a half doing it. Mr. Gilbert churned it at 68 degs. for the purpose of showing the difference in time 3 degs. would make.

Rotting of Greenhouse Lettuce.

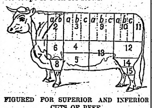
According to Professor Humphrey, of the Massachusetts station, the rotting of greenhouse lettuce is caused by a fungus, and the remedy he suggests is removing all sources of infection by burning the affected plants and thoroughly cleaning the woodwork by whitewashing. New soil ought to replace the old. For powdery mildew upon cucumbers under glass it is advised to spray the affected plants with a solution of sulphide of potassium, one ounce to three gallons of water.

The borer that attacks the apple and quince trees also attacks the locust, white ash and mountain ash, and those who try to destroy them in the orchard should also look after them in any of these trees that grow near by, in order to keep their numbers reduced, says The American Cultivator.

PRIME BEEF.

View from the Butchers' Standpoint fo the Benefit of Farmers.

The illustration here reproduced from The Prairie Farmer represents a fat Hereford cow, carefully figured to show the farmer where the several prime to inferior cuts lie. It will be seen that the inferior parts lie forward of the girth place, and in 4, 5, 13, 12, 14 and 15. Yet this term is used only relatively. A, b, 2, 7, 4, 5, 13 and 12 were relatively good, as being eligible for corned beef, for stewing, and in case of 6 and 12, for drying, so 1, 16, 8, 14 and 15 will come in nicely for soups or even for stews.



FIGURED FOR SUPERIOR AND INFERIOR CUTS OF BEEF.

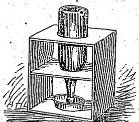
The explanation of the cut from the butchers' standpoint, says the journal quoted, is as follows: All the best roasting pieces lie in a, b, c, 3, and in a, b, c, 9; the best steak also lies in a, b, c, 9; next in a, b, c, 10 and in 11, and the inferior in 12; but 12 is good for drying; 14, 15, 16 and 17 are used for soups and stews; 4, 5 and 33 are the plate pieces best for corning. The brisket (7) comes next: the neck (1) is also used for soups, for corning and also for inferior steak; a, b, 2, may be used either for roasting or for corning. So 12 may be used thus if necessary, and 10, 11 makes most excellent pieces for dried beef.

Keeping Frost Out of Cellars.

During the coldest nights of winter I keep a thermometer in my cellar, and when there is a probability of the temperature falling below the freezing point I keep out the frost by placing a lighted central draft lamp on the cellar floor. The flame is turned low, so that but little oil is consumed, and if necessary it is raised toward morning. I have not banked up the house on the approach of winter since trying this expedient, and have kept out the frost with much less expense than was required in banking up the foundation walls with earth and straw. The heat thrown off by a central draft lamp is very great in proportion to the size of the flame, and could be utilized to protect house plants in the windows and those stored for winter in cellar or cold pit. A lamp of this pattern can also be attached to a window box, so as to give bottom heat in starting early vegetables, flower seeds and cuttings, thus giving the amateur many of the conveniences of a greenhouse or hotbed, writes a correspondent in American Agriculturist.

Water in the Poultry Yard.

Water vessels must be filled fresh at least once a day, and so arranged that the birds cannot scratch dirt into them or make them foul. During the winter take care that snow is not allowed to fall into the drinking vessels; any real quantity of snow water reduces flesh in the fowls very soon. During cold weather it is a wise precaution to add to the water a few drops of a solution of sulphate of iron; just enough to give a slight mineral taste. This will in a measure guard against roup and act as a tonic generally. Where one has the Douglas mixture on hand, it may be substituted for the sulphate of iron.



A WATERING DEVICE FOR POULTRY.

The cut illustrates a simple watering device which Country Gentleman explains is made as follows: Make an oblong box with two crosspieces or shelves; in one make a hole the size of the neck of the bottle intended to be used; in the other make a hole the size of bottom of bottle, then use a common flowerpot saucer for water. Be sure to have the lower shelf made so as to hang the bottle a little clear of the bottom of saucer.

Milking Machines.

"It would be strictly true to say that we don't know of any milking machine in successful operation anywhere," says Hoard's Dairyman, "but what we don't know would make several books. There may be such a machine in existence, or many of them. It is claimed, however, by Dr. Babcock and others who have made special studies in this line that in the nature of things 'the introduction of machine methods of milking would result in a poor quality of milk and a shortened period of lactation, and in general in lowering the standard of our dairy animals.'"

A Good Ant Destroyer.

An English authority says that a good ant destroyer is made up of half a pound of flour of sulphur and four ounces of potash, which are heated in an earthern vessel until they are dissolved. After thoroughly mixing and cooling beat to powder. Infuse this powder in water and apply the liquid in the infested places.

Vice President Morton has gone into the broiler machine business. On his farm at Rhinecliff, N. Y., are incubators enough to keep 2,000 chicks at a time growing, of all sizes—from those just peeping through the shell to the young cockerel old enough to squeak out his first little crow, which is generally his last one, as the broilers are sold as soon as they are large enough.

IN THE SHADOWS.

As the shadows filled the room with peace,
We spoke of our absent friends:
How some were dead and some were sped
To the faraway earth ends.

And by some magic of yearning hearts
The lost seemed warm and near;
Yea, loved so much we could almost touch
Their hands and feel them here.

And when the lamps were lit, and speech
Waxed merrier, yet the place
Felt strangely bare, and each one there
Missed some beloved face.

—Richard Burton in Harper's Weekly.

New York's Women Authors.

Among the exhibits presented at Chicago by the women managers will be a compilation of the names of all the women authors who are natives of New York state or hold residence therein. The list already embraces over 200 authors of either books, articles or pamphlets of acknowledged merit. In the list thus far collected are to be found the names of Mrs. Isabella Macdonald Alden (Pansy), Mrs. Mary Clemmer Ames, Mrs. Amelia Barr, Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, Susan Fenimore Cooper, Mrs. Croly (Jenny June), Mary E. Mapes Dodge, Mary J. Holmes, Mrs. Sarah Jane Lippincott, Mrs. Anna Katherine Green Rohlfs, Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan Warner, Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Mrs. Julia Wright, Eliza Ann Youmans and more equally familiar names.—Albany Letter.

Moore's Greatest Poem.

"Lalla Rookh" was read universally and translated into several European languages. The poem has no lofty Miltonic flights—no hall of Eblis reaching the height of the sublime—but it is calculated to suit the taste of every order of the mind. Young and old, educated and uneducated, comprehend its luxurious imagery, sweet passages, fascinating descriptions and gorgeous voluptuousness; hence the uncommon popularity of the poem. Those who have hearts for the deeper things of humanity—what enjoyments come not from external color, orient hues and Tyrian purple?—will prefer the heart which is shown in many of Moore's other productions.—Westminster Review.

Apples as Medicine.

Chemically, the apple is composed of vegetable fiber, albumen, sugar, gum, chlorophyl, malic acid, gallic acid, lime and much water. Furthermore, the German analysts say that the apple contains a larger percentage of phosphorus than any other fruit or vegetable. The phosphorus is admirably adapted for renewing the essential nervous matter, lecithin, of the brain and spinal chord. It is perhaps for the same reason, rudely understood, that old Scandinavian traditions represent the apple as the food of the gods, who, when they felt themselves to be growing feeble and infirm, resorted to this fruit for renewing their powers of mind and body.—Medical Age.

Don't Drink Wine with Bananas.

The statement made in connection with the death of Colonel Gilmore that wine and banana juice combined made a deadly poison has caused much comment and much more comparing of notes. That to eat bananas and drink wine immediately afterward is to court certain death, as was stated by a gentleman of some experience, is not correct, or I would have died a score of deaths from poison before this, and the inhabitants of the West Indian islands would have been decimated time and again, for the combination is common among those who can secure wine.

It is possible that some particular wines are dangerous in combination with bananas, but the rule does not apply either to champagne or sherry. The suggestion, however, that bananas are injurious in connection with anything is rather a novel one to me, because there are few fruits which will preserve life and health like the banana. When properly ripened the fruit is at once delicious and nutritious.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of the state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

IT IS said that an additional judge will be appointed in this district. Should this rumor prove true there is no doubt but that Judge Mills will be the man appointed.

SENATOR WASHBURN is feeling confident of passing his anti-option bill this session. One source of hope is the fact that the legislatures of several southern states have recently passed resolutions in favor of the passage of his bill. It is to be hoped that the senator will not be disappointed.

WHILE nothing official has been said by that road it is generally understood that the Great Northern road intends to extend its Fosston branch to Duluth at an early day. The fact that T. B. Walker is engaged in building two saw mills in the Leech Lake country is in itself significant and sure evidence that some road will reach that region at an early date, as he is not the man to take chances on uncertainties.

A DISPATCH from Moorhead says a petition is being circulated for the enactment of a bill this winter giving Governor Nelson authority to appoint another judge for this judicial district, which is too large for one judge to properly attend to. This is a move in the right direction, and an additional judge should be appointed or the district divided—the latter being perhaps the most practical.

ALLEN J. GREER is a candidate for speaker of the house, and will be pushed by the south part of the State. They could select no better man but could hardly expect much help from the north part when this section has in Lee of Todd County such excellent material for speaker. Either man would make an excellent speaker but it is high time this section had recognition in that line. It is commonly understood that Mr. Lee has the call on the speakerhip.

IN THE Donnelly-Fish controversy the Great West has struck the keynote and is master of the situation. If there is any principle in the people's party platform it can never be demonstrated or developed by fusion with either of the old parties; all that fusion could accomplish would be the acquisition of offices. Mr. Donnelly's open advocacy of fusion only proves what the JOURNAL h as long suspected that his greatest interest in the people's party was an office for himself.

THE second session of the Fifty-second congress convened last Monday, and on Tuesday President Harrison submitted his annual message to that body. Despite the recent landslide, he still stands firm for protection to American industry, maintaining—and rightly, too—that the country never was in a more prosperous condition than at present. He presents a statiscical arsay of figures to prove the progress of the country in the way of agriculture. manufactures and industry of all kinds. He recommends that the tariff be left severely alone, and let the democrats do the tinkering.

THE McIntosh News asks the JOURNAL "where is that free and open wheat market that the JOURNAL advocates." That is rather a surprising question from that source as no one knows better than Hunt that a free and open wheat market was entirely lost in the recent political shuffle—just as the JOURNAL has all the time predicted it would be if the farmers alliance was dragged into politics. A numof years ago some of the leading farmers of the United States organized the grange in the interests of agriculture which thrived and prospered as long as the organization stuck to its principles, but when designing politicians were allowed to creep in and get control the organization was destroyed. A few years ago some of our leading farmers got together and organized the alliance, as a business organization, declaring no one eligible to membership except actual, practical farmers. As long as this principle was strictly adhered too the alliance grew and prospered, but when Ignatius Donnelly was allowed to creep in and puncture the institution sufficiently to admit designing politicians to creep in then the alliance began to droop and when later on the same hand was allowed to make a political organization of it then it died and the people's party—a would-be political organization was the result. And what earthly good has the organization ever done for the average farmer of, the Red River Valley? It has utterly ignored the most vital question that effects their welfare and you have not heard one single people's party paper refer to it during the campaign. Even your great apostle of light—Ignatius Donnelly, has not once referred to the matter during the past campaign and the fusion with democrats which he indorsed, shows that his main efforts were directed solely for the acquisition of office for himself—for that was the only thing that could be accomplished by fusion, as every intelligent farmer well knows. Mr. Hunt knows this as well as we do as is proven in his own course during the past campaign when he vigorously protested against the election of designing politicians to office—men who identified themselves with the people's party simply and solely for office, and Mr. Hunt knows as well as we do that if the farmers alliance had continued to exist as a business organization THESE VERY MEN COULD NOT HAVE ACCOMPLISHED THEIR PURPOSE BECAUSE THEY COULD NOT HAVE BELONGED TO THE ORGANIZATION. Is there anything plainer than that? The farmers alliance as it was organized was a sufficient safe-guard but if we mistake not, Mr. Hunt was one of those who howled the loudest to have this safe-guard destroyed, insisting that the bars should be let down and the designing politicians should be let in to capture and destroy the organization. "I was an eminent man before the alliance existed and I WILL BE AFTER IT IS DEAD" said Ignatius Donnelly only a short time before he choked the organization to death. Significent words! Showing very plainly to the intelligent mind where stood the man who stood in the place of the leader of the alliance—for such he pretended to be and no one disputed his claim. The rank and file have been deceived—cruelly deceived but their eyes are being opened and when that day comes, when they are fully awake to the situation, then will the day of reckoning be and the true friends of the common people will stand revealed in a clear light but, woe be to those demagogues who have fattened upon the miseries of the people. The JOURNAL has ever been and ever will be found espousing the cause of the common people as against monopolists and demagogues of all descriptions. Mr. Hunt knows very well that if the editor of this paper had not been true to his convictions, but had sought to profit by the sufferings of the people, that we could have had almost any office within the gift of the people, but we advocated the formation of the alliance as a business organization because we saw in it the means for relief to to the common people—to our farmers and this we did until we were admitted into a knowledge of the real intention of its leaders and then we had the courage to fight against those leaders and to oppose the object they sought. While a number of our honest farmer friends scolded us soundly we asked them to suspend their judgment for a short time and see if future events did not justify the position we took. And everything so far has justified our position even sooner than we had expected it. Among other things that we prophesied should the alliance be dragged into politics was that demagogues—played out old party hacks—would ride into office on the popular wave, and that the interests of the farmers would be lost sight of in the deal. How far was that prophesy out of the way? We can point to scores of such who have been honored with a little brief authority who will draw their salary with their usual promptitude but will be worth no more to the people than they were when honored by an office in either of the old parties. Mr. Hunt, being a man of average intelligence well knows that our words are true and how under the canopy he can ever expect a "free and open market" or any other good thing from the leaders of the people's party puzzles us. And how he can pretend to think that the present people's party is the old alliance (and at the same time pretend to be honest) bothers us agan and most of all. We should really hate to be forced to the conclusion that BRO. HUNT is not HONEST in his views!

Jay Gould Dead.

A GREAT man has gone. At the age of nearly 57 years Jay Gould "the wizard of Wall Street" the richest man in the United States if not in the world, died possessed of a fortune said to be over $100,000,000, one half of which he has acquired since 1890. That he was a great man is indisputable but his greatness only existed in his ability to acquire wealth. While the names of WASHINGTON and LINCOLN will live long in the hearts of a grateful people for the good they have done in the cause of humanity the name of Jay Gould will be remembered as simply that of a successful money getter. Unlike the Vanderbilt's and the Astor's of the present day Mr. Gould started in business life without money and what he leaves to his family represents the acquisition of a single lifetime. He was indeed a great man but not an enviable one.

THE Holiday issue of the Message was a hummer even for that excellent paper. It was an extra size containing 16 pages of excellent and choice reading matter in a beautiful tinted cover. The Message is the best religious paper printed in the northwest and for the fact that it is a good paper and that it is a home production edited and printed right here in Polk county it should be in the home of every enterprising citizen of Polk county at least. In fact it is full of interesting matter each month for every dweller in the whole northwest.

THE Globe and several other papers are saying that Henry Feig is trying to beat H. E. Boen out of the seat in congress to which they assume Boen was elected. Well, now, you little fellows needn't worry about Feig! He is a MAN, he is, and he made the grandest fight of any candidate in the state of Minnesota, and if he did not get a majority of the votes cast it was not for lack of good hard work on his part. and what he is after now is simply to see that he is not cheated in the count. If Mr. Boen was honestly elected if only by a vote or two majority, no man would quicker concede the point than Mr. Feig, but, on the other hand, if he was not fairly and honestly elected, but was counted in you can bet your bottom dollar that it will avail him naught, for Mr. Feig is just the man who will sift the matter to the bottom, and smoke him out if any skull-duggery exists—and there seems to be, but it is not, as the Globe says, in the simple fact that some of Boen's ballots were printed simply H. E. Boen while others had the full name, Haldor. Mr. Feig will not base a contest on any such pretext and he will bring no contest unless he can show frauds perpetrated, and if he does contest he will win his case and don't you let that fact escape your memory for a moment.

Pete Peterson had a big crowd but did not begin to be as good a show as Jeffreys Lewis.

Rev. J. G. Smith will go to Duluth next Monday for his family and will return the latter part of the week with them to become a permanent resident of our city.

Suicide Near Warren.

Daniel Lodin, a farmer about fifty years old, who lived in Comstock, Marshall County, about seven miles from Warren, committed suicide last Saturday afternoon by hanging. About 4 o'clock his little son discovered him hanging by a rope tied to a rafter in the granary. The boy ran for a neighbor but the man was dead before anyone arrived to cut down the body.

Couldn't Lick all the parties.

Warren Sheaf.—The republican party could have licked the democratic party, or any other party, one at a time, but when democrats, populists, prohibitionists, socialists, anarchists, single-taxers, free-traders, woman suffragists, popocrats, and Mrs. Lease, and some of the women, all jump onto us at once, it is no wonder that we got overpowered and suffered defeat. It was a deep laid plot to accomplish our ruin. It is not fair play. Next time we tackle the democrats, we will have more help.

The Fosston delegation arrived on Tuesday and they were about the maddest lot of people who came to the city. It seems that the Great Northern road had given no notice of the discontinuance of the daily train on the Fosston line and those who had made arrangements to come on Monday to attend court on Tuesday waited around the depot Monday till about 4 p. m. before they were made aware of the fact that there would be no train that day, and they didn't get to Crookston till Tuesday evening. The Fosston people are justly indignant at this summary taking off of the daily train service without any notice whatever, thus not allowing them an opportunity to make other arrangements. Truly the Great Northern has little respect for the rights of its patrons.

The office of the Commercial presents a lively appearance these evenings. It is the rendezvous of the attorneys and others connected with the court, who meet to chat over the day's doings in court.

Opposed to Sunday Opening.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Northwestern congressmen generally are opposed to opening the world's fair buildings on Sunday. Congressman Pickler said he would oppose the compromise proposition which is to open the buildings but not have the machinery in motion. Congressman Johnson said he would oppose any compromise. He thought it would be as bad to give half an exhibition on Sunday as a whole one. The Minnesota members express similar opinions.

THE FINAL FIGURES

MINNESOTA ELECTION RETURNS ARE NOW COMPLETE.

Harrison Got Five Thousand More Votes in '92 Than in '88—He Also Gathered in Almost Twelve Thousand More Votes Than the Republican State Ticket.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 5.—The secretary of state has received the official returns of the vote cast on Nov. 8 from all the counties of the state, and while there is a possibility that a few inaccuracies may have crept in, which cannot be corrected until the state canvassing board meets, the figures given are substantially correct, and subsequent changes will not affect the results to any appreciable extent.

The total vote for presidential electors was 267,730, an increase of 5,542 over the vote of 1888. The Republicans received a plurality of 15,656.

The total vote for governor was 255,840, or 11,890 below the presidential vote. Of these Nelson, Republican, received 109,205; Lawler, Democrat, 94,684; Donnelly, Populist, 39,784; Dean, Prohibition, 12,167, giving Nelson 14,521 plurality. The vote for governor is given by counties in the following table:

The vote for the rest of the state ticket is summarized as follows:

Lieutenant Governor—

Clough, R	105,157
Hawkins, D	88,732
Nelson, P	37,594
Kron, Pro	13,807

Clough's Plurality, 16,425.

Secretary of State—

Brown, R	105,630
Nelson, D	95,606
Martin, P	33,122
Aaker, Pro	14,567

Brown's plurality, 10,024.

State Treasurer—

Bobleter, R	106,745
Leicht, D	89,811
Ringdal, P	26,470
Evans, Pro	14,397

Bobleter's plurality, 16,934.

Attorney General—

Childs, R	108,917
Nethaway, D	87,630
Macdonald, P	37, 28
Taylor, Pro	14,156

Child's plurality 21,287.

Supreme Court Justices—

Vanderburg, R. and Pro	98,175
Dickinson, R. and Pro	98,885
Mitchell, R., D. and Pro	162 129
Buck, D. and P	112,814
Canty, D. and P	109,086
Davidson, P	42,374

The figures on the supreme court justices indicate the defeat of both the Republican candidates, and that for some inexplicable reason they fell several thousand votes behind the rest of the Republican ticket.

Final returns show that the constitutional amendment prohibiting special legislation was carried by a majority of 27,924 votes. There were 77,517 votes cast in favor of the amendment and 49,593 against it.

TALK AMONG POLITICIANS

Concerning the Organization of the Coming State Legislature.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 5.—In the hotel corridors there is considerable talk heard among the politicians concerning the organization of the coming session of the legislature.

The leading candidates for speaker are: Greer, of Wabasha county, in the First congressional district; Lee, of Todd county, member of the "Big Republican Four" from the Forty-sixth legislative district; O. B. Turrell, of Redwood, who will doubtless receive the support of the Second congressional district, and J. A. Boggs, of Duluth, who will come down backed by the solid St. Louis county delegation.

For chief clerk, F. A. Johnson, of St. Paul; Robert Deakin, of Macalester; M. J. Downing, of Renville, and S. J. Phillips, of Duluth, are the candidates. Johnson's chances of securing the plum are said to be the best.

Friend Ellingbo was surprised on Wednesday evening to learn that he had had a gasoline stove explosion in the morning. The facts are that early in the morning his stove did not burn readily and he had trouble getting the early breakfasts and supposing the trouble to be lack of gasoline, at eight o'clock he went to the drug store and got some oil. When he went outside to put it in the tank he found that there was a sufficient supply in the tank and upon investigation found that ice had formed about the pipe causing the gasoline to flow too slowly. He then broke the ice away, forgetting that the stove inside was not prepared for the deluge that it got just as soon as the oil flowed freely but was reminded of that fact by screams from the kitchen. Running quickly in he saw a stream of fire several feet high, but by prompt action and good efficient help by the bystanders a serious conflagration was prevented; that there was no explosion seems almost miraculous.

Tom Harris returned from a pleasant visit to the old home in Wabasha county in time to serve his country as juror. Tom says he had a very good time but is glad to get back to civilization again.

The Northern Lights company produced "Michael Strogoff" last evening in a most excellent manner. To-night the popular "Galley Slave" will be presented. This company is giving entertainments of a high order, in a good manner and at very low prices. A company of this kind should be well patronized.—Detroit Free Press, Michigan.

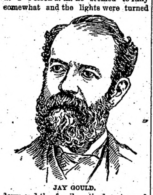
JAY GOULD IS DEAD

THE GREAT NEW YORK FINANCIER PASSES AWAY,

Surrounded by Members of His Family. His Mind Clear to the Last—A Few Facts from the Career of a Most Remarkable Man.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—The following additional facts regarding the death of Mr. Jay Gould have been given out:

All day Thursday and in the evening contradictory reports regarding Mr. Gould's condition were circulated, but late in the evening it was acknowledged that he was failing fast and that in all probability he would not recover. In fact at 11 o'clock it was said that he could not live the night out. However, at 1 o'clock a. m. he seemed to rally somewhat and the lights were turned down and the family retired to try and get some rest. Dr. Munn and the nurses remained with the patient.



JAY GOULD.

At daylight Mr. Gould's condition became more alarming and gradually the mebers of his family again assembled at his bedside. It was apparent to to all that the end was fast approaching Mr. Gould seemed to realize the truth himself. No pain attended the last moments of the dying man. The end came peacefully and quietly. Just before he died, Mr. Gould, realizing that he had but a little while longer to live, expressed a desire that all the members of his family be called that he might look upon them for the last time. He was perfectly conscious and entirely composed, meeting the end with calmness. His mind was clear to the last, as was demonstrated by the fact that he missed the face of a member of the family who had left the room for a moment. Mr. Gould's last words were in the form of a request that he might at the closing moments of his life be surrounded by the beloved members of his family.

The physicians have not yet stated definitely what was the nature of Mr. Gould's recent illness, but it is generally believed it was pulmonary consumption. It is said that Mr. Gould had several hemorrhages of the lungs recently, the first having been the day before Thanksgiving and another a few days after and still another a few days ago. Whether or not the pulmonary disease made its appearance recently is not known positively, but it is said that his family have long been aware of the fact that Mr. Gould was a victim to the disease.

The Funeral Services.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—The funeral services of Jay Gould were held at his late residence at 4 p. m. yesterday. They were very brief, lasting only half an hour. The remains were not taken from the house to the tomb until 3 p. m. today.

PLEADS NOT GUILTY.

The Trial Proper of Rev. Charles A. Briggs for Heresy Commenced.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The fourth day of the trial of Professor Charles A. Briggs, of the Union Theological Seminary, for heresy, was opened with prayer by Moderator Bliss.

Dr. J. Ford Sutton then moved that the charges be considered sufficient and the accused be put on his defense. The motion prevailed and the trial proper began.

Dr. Briggs was asked by the moderator if he plead guilty or not guilty, and he answered not guilty. The prosecuting committee then put in evidence the first and second editions of Dr. Briggs' inaugural address. They also put in evidence all the works of Dr. Briggs bearing upon the charges, the Holy Scriptures and the standards of the Presbyterian church of America. Dr. Briggs declined to present any evidence until he had an opportunity to ascertain what portion of the writings offered in evidence was to be used in addition to that part quoted in the amended charge.

Opened to Settlement.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The first act of Congressman Johnson, of North Dakota, after his return to Washington was getting a large tract of land in the Minot district opened to settlement. Surveyor General Williams has been authorized to file plats in the land office. The opening of this land will add largely to the income of the Minot land office. Colonel Plummer may be induced to withdraw his resignation.

No River and Harbor Appropriations.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Representative Blanchard, of Louisiana, chairman of the house committee on rivers and harbors said that there would be no new river and harbor improvements authorized by this session of congress. Sixteen million dollars, he says, will be required to carry on existing contracts and this amount will be provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Gibson Barely Alive.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Dec. 6.—Senator Gibson is barely alive, and that is all that can be said of him up to noon. The doctors do not expect him to live through the day.

LAWMAKERS WORK

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS CONVENED.

No Incidents Out of the Regular Order Mark the Opening—Many Members of the House Absent—Discussing the Situation.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The final session of the Fifty-second congress opened at noon, and, with probably a brief intermission for Christmas, will now run its uninterrupted course till the 4th of March next, when a new congress and a new administration will come into existence simultaneously. Whether or not the new congress in both its branches will take up its session soon after the old congress dies, is for the future to determine.

The scenes of the day's opening were marked by no events out of the ordinary run. There were the customary crowds in the galleries and corridors, a trifle less expectant and demonstrative than on former occasions, when topics of greater public interest were pending; the usual floral outbursts on the desks of favored senators and members; the usual preliminary hand shakings and exchange of recess reminisensies—striking enough some of these were—and, in brief, there were all the expected incidents of opening day, rendered more than usually attractive and pleasant by clear skies, bright sunshine and bracing weather, not biting enough to call for heavy winter clothing.

Both houses adjourned after receiving notice from the president that his message would not be read until tomorrow's session.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

It Is Mainly a Review of the Work of the Various Departments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Both houses of congress meet at noon. Imediately after roll call the president's message was read. The message was mainly a review of the work of the various departments of the government, his recommendations being very limited. The work of each department is warmly commended, that of Secretaries Rusk and Wanamaker especially so.

Believes in Protection.

Regarding the tariff, after viewing the progress of the country for the past four years, the president says:

I believe that the protective system, which now 'or something like thirty years has prevailed in our legislation, has been a mighty instrument for the development of our national wealth, and a most powerful agency in protecting the homes of our workingmen from the invasion of want. I have felt a most solicitous interest to preserve to our working people rates of wages that would not only give daily bread, but supply a comfortable margin for those home attractions and family comforts and enjoyments without which life is neither hopeful nor sweet.

Let the Democratic Congress Attend to Tariff Revision.

It is not my purpose to renew here the argument in favor of a protective tariff. The result of the recent election must be accepted as having introduced a new policy. We must assume that the present tariff, constructed upon the lines of protection, is to be repealed and that there is to be substituted for it a tariff law constructed solely with reference to revenue; that no duty is to be higher because the increase will keep open an American mill or keep up the wages of an American workman, but that in every case such a rate of duty is to be imposed as will bring to the treasury of the United States the largest returns of revenue. The contests not being between schedules but between principles, it would be offensive to suggest that the prevailing party will not carry into legislation the principles advocated by it and the pledges given to the people. The tariff bills passed by the house of representatives at the last session were as I supposed, even in the opinion of their promoters, inadequate, and justified only by the fact that the senate and house of representatives were not in accord and that a general revision should not, therefore, be undertaken.

I recommend that the whole subject of tariff revision be left to the incoming congress. It is a matter of regret that this work must be delayed for at least three months for the threat of great tariff changes introduces so much uncertainty that an amount not easily estimated, of business in action and of diminished production will necessarily result.

Those who have advocated a protective tariff can well afford to have their disastrous forecasts of a change of policy disappointed. If a system of customs duties can be framed that will set the idle wheels and looms of Europe in motion and crowd our warehouses with foreign made goods and at the same time keep our own mills busy; that will give us an increased participation in the "markets of the world" of greater value than the home market we surrender; that will give increased work to foreign workmen upon products to be consumed by our people without diminishing the amount of work to be done here; that will enable the american manufacturer to pay his workmen from 50 to 100 per cent. more in wages than is paid in the foreign mill and yet to compete in our market and in foreign markets with the foreign producer; that will further reduce the cost of articles of wear and food without reducing the wages of those who produce them; that can be celebrated, after its effects have been realized, as its expectation has been in Europe as well as in American cities, the authors and promoters of it will be entitled to the highest praise.

Among the recommendations which the president makes are these:

For a continuance of liberal pension appropriations.

For a ship canal which will make the country's commerce independent of both Canadian railways and waterways.

For aid for the Nicaragua canal scheme.

For continuance of subsidies for ocean mail steamers.

For restriction of immigration and for national quarantine legislation.

For an election law which will insure a free ballot and a fair count.

A Cold Day.

We do have some cold days in the northwest in winter, but the ones we have in mind would make the worst blizzard that ever blew seem like a tropical summer by comparison. Some few hundred thousand or million years ago the whole of British America and a large part of the United States were buried under a sea of ice hundreds of feet thick. The border line of this glacier stretched northwesterly from the coast of New Jersey through Pennsylvania to Ohio, thence southwesterly through Indiana to a line drawn east and west across Illinois about fifty miles south of St. Louis. From thence the line bore away northwesterly into the Missouri Valley. We know the limit by the granite boulders that were borne along in the progress of the glacier, and are not found south of the line described. There was a long succession of cold days then, but as the northwest was not inhabited there was no tourist travel to the resorts of the south. Things have changed. People buy ice now—and in southern cities they make it. It is a desirable thing. Cold days now make people think of traveling south—and in selecting a railroad remember that the Burlington route has its own lines to Chicago and St. Louis, offers choice of routes, and makes low rates. To-Day

Hood's sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world, admired in prosperity and envied in merit by thousands of would-be competitors. It has a larger sale than any other medicine. Such success could not be won without positive merit.

The December Wide Awake is a true Christmas number. It has the full Christmas flavor, from the brilliantly colored frontispiece that opens it to the fantastic flower piece that ends it. On the opening reading page a smoking plum-pudding, holly-decorated, sends its grateful stream in a mass of tint over the whole page, and serves as the initial to Margaret Sidney's quaint ode "To the One, Whoever He Be," who discovered the toothsome plum-pudding—"The Bluecoat School," by Louise Imogen Guiney, is highly interesting and fully illustrated by Joseph Pennel; Mr. Stoddard's capital Christmas story, "Mr. Van Gelt's Case," is full of the best Christmas spirit. Mrs. Sandham's practical paper for Christmas celebration is entitled "The Vagaries of St. Claus;" a Christmas ballad by R. Macdonald Alden, "How Lajla Found the Christ-child," is beautifully illustrated by Merrill. "How Jonathan was Good," by Elizabeth Cumings, tells us over the old, old story of a boy who did so want to be good, but—. Estelle M. Hurll's description of "A Child's Christmas in France" is full of interest. A fantastic floral piece by the artist of flowers, de Longpre, closes this delightful number, which is full of other good things that we have no space to mention here.

Price 20 cents a number, $2.40 a year. On sale at news stands or sent postpaid on receipt of price, by D. Lothrop, Company, Publishers, Boston.

The Cause of Rheumatism.

An acid which exists in sour milk and cider, called lactic acid, is believed by physicians to be the cause of rheumatism. Accumulating in the blood, it attacks the fibrous tissues in the joints, and causes agonizing pains. What is needed is a remedy to neutralize the acid, and to so invigorate the kidneys and liver that all waste will be carried off. Hood's sarsaparilla is heartily recommended by many whom it has cured of rheumatism. It possesses just the desired qualities, and so thoroughly purifies the blood as to prevent occurrence of rheumatic attacks. We suggest a trial of Hood's sarsaparilla by all who suffer from rheumatism.

ORDER TO EXAMINE ACCOUNTS.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, December 6th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of George Dumas, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Fred Benoit, administrator of the estate of George Dumas deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law:

It is ordered, That said account be examined, and petition heard, by this Court, on Tuesday the 3rd day of January A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County.

And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 6th day of December, A. D. 1892.

THE GOLDEN CAVES.
BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.
"M. QUAD."
COPYRIGHT, 1892, BY AMERICAN PRESS ASS'N

CHAPTER I.

"Halt!"

It is ten o'clock in the forenoon of a June day. Ten white topped wagons, drawn by as many spans of heavy horses, are strung out in line on the plains of Northern Dakota, while fifteen horsemen are distributed its length to act as guards. There is a driver to each wagon, and you can thus count twenty-five souls. Twenty-five? Ah! but sharp eyes detect the fluttering of a woman's dress on the seat of one of the wagons. Twenty-six, then, with their faces sternly set to the west, each man heavily armed and every eye scanning the country ahead and about for signs of danger.

Who are they?

The gallant Custer has made his report of gold in the Black Hills, and fifty thousand seekers after wealth are moving to the west. The country is still in the hands of the savages, and infuriated at the thought of being overrun and pushed to the wall, as has been the case over and over again, every man who can bear arms is on the warpath to drive back the invaders.

This party has come out from Brule City, Dakota. It followed the White river for more than two hundred miles, and left it to strike northwest for the forks of the Big Cheyenne two days before we found them. For the last three days Indian signs have been plenty. They have entered upon the territory of the hostiles, and every mile of their progress will now be watched by keen eyes.

"Halt! Is there danger ahead?"

The wagons close up rapidly, as the drivers have been drilled to do, and in ten minutes everything is prepared for whatever may happen.

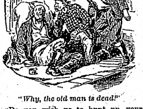
"Here, Harkins—here, Taylor!" calls the leader to two of the mounted men, and as they ride forward he continues:

"The old man is going to turn up his toes, and I've called a halt to let him die in peace. He's been asking for both of you."

Who was the old man? He had joined the party at the last moment, coming from no one cared where. He was an old hunter and trapper, and had been in the Black Hills country. He could guide the party by the best and most direct route, and he had the money to outfit himself. He gave his name as Saunders, and his queer speech and actions made the crowd look upon him as weak in the head. He had been taken very ill the day before, and both Harkins and Taylor had shown him many acts of kindness. No one expected his death, and the announcement that his hour had come created much surprise. However, after each had spoken his mind about it, the majority of the men threw themselves down on the grass to smoke or chat, and more than one impatiently estimated the distance lost by this delay.

Harkins and Taylor dismounted and climbed into the wagon where the old man lay. A few hours had wrought a great change in him, and it was plain enough that his time had come.

"Look a-here, men," began the old man as the pair expressed their sorrow for him, "this has come a leetle sooner than I looked fur, but I'm not goin to complain. Fur forty years the Lord has let me live to roam these yere plains and dwell in the mountains, and my race is run. I hain't got no word of complaint."



"Why, the old man is dead!"

"Do you wish us to hunt up your friends and tell them where and how you died?" asked Harkins.

"Friends!" laughed the old man. "I never had one. I hain't got any."

"But can we do anything?" asked Taylor.

"Fustly, prop me up a leetle higher and then give me a drink of whisky. I never sot as much by the stuff as some, but mebbe it will keep life in me till I can spin my yarn. Now, then, did ye ever hear tell of old Bridger?"

"I have," replied Taylor. "He was an old hunter and trapper, who was wiped out at the Fort Kearney massacre."

"Correct; and they've got a fort named after him somewhar' out here. Bridger and me was pards fur many years. We was in this Black Hills country together upward of twenty years ago. I've been wanting to get back thar fur these last five years."

"Did you and Bridger find any gold there?" asked Harkins.

"That's what I'm comin to. I didn't, but he did. We went thar to hunt, bein satisfied if we got enough skins and pelts to keep us in powder and ball. One day when a war party made a dash at us we got separated. I took to the timber and Bridger hid in a cave in a canyon. It was three days before we cum together agin, and then we had to dust out to save our scalps. It was on the way home that Bridger told me what he found in the cave."

The men almost held their breaths, while the old man waited a minute before resuming.

"Bridger never told a lie in his life. What he said about that cave kin be depended on same as if you read it in the good book. Thar was gold thar in heaps. He said it was in lumps and bars, as if it had been melted up—mor'n a span of hosses could draw. He was in thar a day and a half, and he had time to be sartin."

"It was the red man's treasure house!" exclaimed Taylor.

"Waal, no. Bridger didn't reckon the Injuns had ever diskivered the place. He allowed that the gold had bin thar fur a good many years—way back to the time when the Mexicans kivered this country. I've heard tell thar was a white race all over the west."

"Yes, the Aztecs," replied one of the men.

"Them's it. It was them instead of the Injuns who stored up the gold. We allowed to go back after it some day, but the years went on, Bridger got wiped out and now I'm headed that way only to feed the wolves."

"And—and you will tell us where this cave is?" anxiously inquired Taylor.

"I will," replied the dying man, as a smile flitted across his face. "Hain't it curus? One lays a-dyin, thinkin of the hereafter, and the other is jist a-tremblin in his anxiety to git hold of wealth and spend it? It's like poor humanity. The thought of that gold never bothered me an hour, while you will risk your lives fur a sight of it. But I'll tell ye. That's what I axed ye to cum in here fur. You've bin white with me, and I kin reward ye fur it."

Harkins and Taylor glared at each other across the dying man. The fiend of avarice was already whispering in their ears.

"If you strike the big Cheyenne at the forks," said the hunter, "the mountains will be due north of you. The big peak in front of ye has been named after Custer. About five miles to the right of that peak is a canyon—the one up which Bridger fled. He said he went about a mile and then took into a smaller one leadin to the left. He hadn't gone fur before he grabbed a bush to pull himself upon a ledge out of the bottom, and as he reached the ledge he was at the mouth of the cave. He reckoned it was eight or ten feet up, and he thought a path led from it up into the mountain. It ar' always dusky in those rifts, and ye might pass up and down a lifetime and see nothing. It may take ye a month of sarchin, but ye'll find a big reward."

Each man had caught his every word and sought to impress it on his memory, and each secretly hoped that the other would forget. This eagerness resulted in a curious error. Harkins understood the hunter aright when he said to the right of Custer's peak. Taylor understood him to the left.

"Ye'll hev to be on the watch fur redskins," said the old man after a long pause. "They're out and in arms and they'll show ye no mercy. This rush of white men will drive 'em back after a time, and I counsel ye to let the cave alone till it's safe to go thar. Then ye kin make up a small party, bring it off and divide it up as is fair."

"Never!" whispered Taylor as he clenched his hands.

"Divide with him when I can get it all!" demanded Harkins of himself.

They had been friends in danger. The prospect of wealth had turned their friendship to hate. An hour ago they would have periled their lives for each other. Now they wished each other dead.

The possession of gold may bring happiness. The thirst for it may lead to murder.

"Ye hev been good to me and I wish ye luck," said the old man in a whisper, but neither of the men heard him. They were thinking and planning.

"About five miles to the right of Custer's peak," Harkins kept repeating to himself.

"About five miles to the left of Custer's peak," Taylor repeated over and over again. Two or three minutes passed away, and then the latter bent forward and cried out:

"Why, the old man is dead!"

So he was. He had made no struggle—even no sign.

"Well, that was white in him not to delay us," laughed the leader of the caravan when informed of the event. "Some men might have kept us here all day and then concluded not to die after all. Now the only thing is to plant him."

A couple of men were soon scooping out a shallow grave with their spades, and within half an hour after the flame of life had flickered out the body was covered and the wagon train moving on.

Then a couple of great vultures dropped from the sky to earth to wait.

Three or four gaunt wolves, their long hair dirty and ragged, came skulking over the broken ground.

Five painted and feathered Indians crept out of a dry ravine scarcely forty rods away, and with the vengence of devils set to work with hands and sticks to uncover the body. There was a suppressed shout as it was rolled out and another as the scalp was held aloof.

Five minutes later the wolves and vultures had the body to themselves.

CHAPTER II.

And now, as the wagon train makes its slow way over the broken country, let us see with whom we have to do.

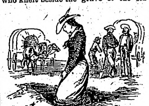
Two years before this story opens Harkins had come out from England to better his fortunes. He was English, bred and born, a resident of Leamington, and his wife had died the year before. Though a widower, he was not childless. The woman in the wagon train was his daughter, Bess. A woman? No, a girl of eighteen—a typical English girl of the middle class. The father had tried ranching and failed, and had put his last dollar into the outfit of the gold hunting party. Should Bess be left behind among strangers in a strange land, or taken on an expedition which had its peril for every hour?

"Are you crazy?" queried the gold hunters, when Harkins asked them to decide.

But when the train was ready to move out of Brule City, and the men saw the red cheeked English lassie seated beside young Joe Blyn, who was to drive the Harkins wagon while the owner rode horseback, they lifted their hats as they rode past. And when they saw how brave she tried to look and act, and understood that she was willing to brave all perils for the affections she bore her father, they said to one another:

"There's a girl to be proud of. Let's give the Englishman a fair show."

And no queen could have asked for or been shown greater respect. She it was who knelt beside the grave of the old hunter, laid away in such unseemly haste and with so little ceremony, and uttered a short prayer in behalf of the dead, and though some of the wilder spirits affected to ridicule, there was a look of pride on their faces as they turned them upon the girl kneeling before them.



She it was who knelt beside the grave of the old hunter.

Who was Joe Blyn? An American of twenty-four, ranchman, scout, gold hunter; brave as a lion and tender as a woman. He had been with Sheridan and Custer, with Miles and Cook. He had carried dispatches from field to fort, from post to headquarters. The soldiers and civilians knew him as Joe; the Indians called him "The White Wind." More than once they had found his trail and pushed him hard, but never had they overtaken him. And within an hour from the time Joe Blyn helped Bess Harkins to a seat on the wagon he knew that he loved her, and she realized that she had fallen in with agreeable company.

Who was Taylor? An Iowa farmer; a man of will and nerve, who thirsted to acquire wealth speedily. People at home called him stingy and grasping.

An hour after the old hunter's death the light of avarice shone so brightly in his eyes that a physiognomist would have whispered to himself, "There is a man who would do murder for gold!"

With the others we have little to do. Expeditions such as this are made up of anybody and everybody. No one asks where they come from and certificates of character are not demanded.

When one speaks of the plains of the great west you must not confound them with the prairies. "God made the prairies," says an Indian legend, "while satan made the plains." The one is a level, covered with rich grass and carpeted with flowers, and the soil turned up by the plow is the richest of earth. The other is rolling, broken ground, ridged, tumbled, confused. Rock outcrops, the soil is almost flint and nature can scarcely force a weed or bush to grow. Wolve and serpents are at home on these desolate stretches of country, but all other living things avoid them. There is a lonesomeness and a desolation and a homesickness about them which has caused men to go mad.

It was over such a stretch of country that the wagon train slowly picked its way. Ridge after ridge, dip after dip, always the same sterile scenery; always the same vultures flying in circles so high up that they looked no larger than robins.

They speak of boundless prairies. So are the plains boundless—or seem to be. You may ride for 200 miles before there is a change of soil or scenery.

Noon comes and a brief halt is made. The men have grown more anxious within the last hour.

"Signs" are more plentiful.

The feathered heads of Indians have been seen above the banks of the dry ravines at short intervals, and it is plain to all that the train is under espionage. Your noble red man is a coward. He must fight with the odds in his favor if he fights at all. Honest warfare is unknown to him. In his death song he will sing of his brave deeds, but he lies about them.

Men and women argue and contend that the red man of America has been cheated, abused and maligned. They view him from a distance. In his native state he lives by choice like a dog. He is vicious in every sense. He was born with a desire to torture and kill. His love is tyranny and abuse—his friendship to be avoided. If he believes in a great Manitou, that belief does not prevent him from being a beast and a devil combined. He betrays his own kindred. He steals from his own tribe. He tortures a prisoner of his own kind with as much relish as he does a white man. Taken as a whole, he has not one single trait or sentiment to prove his right to cumber the earth.

Aye! the red devils had been watching that train for the last twenty hours as a cat watches its victim when released for the moment. They were ahead of it—behind—to the right—the left. At first two or three—then seven or eight—then fifteen—then thirty. They were the scouts and spies, and every half hour one rode away to the west to bear information to the chiefs in waiting.

The gold hunters must be wiped out to the last man. Their number had been counted over and over, their weapons noted and the chances calculated. The time was not yet. The lay of the ground was not suitable and enough Indians had not come up. They dared not attack with fifty—a hundred—a hundred and fifty. They would move upon the little band with two hundred or more—four or five to one. That is Indian bravery.

When a dozen of them have run down a hunter and lifted his scalp there are shouts of victory—words of boasting—a war dance about his body. They never figure on odds—unless against themselves.

When the train was ready to move on after its halt the leader called all the men together for counsel. He had been a soldier, as had many of the men. He knew what to expect, and was prudently preparing for it. Each horseman and each driver was given orders for emergency, and every man received them willingly and with a desire to obey.

As the train moved on it was closed up as solidly as possible, and each driver had his weapons at hand. It was an hour before the Indians showed their hand. Then one after another appeared in sight out of rifle range, until fifty could be counted. A train of emigrants would have been rattled at sight of these, and there would have been confusion and disagreement as how best to act. When you have an enemy alarmed you have him half whipped. No one knows this better than an Indian.

The men of an emigrant train would have begun firing, and thus wasted their ammunition. The bolder spirits would have voted for a charge, thus giving the devils hiding behind the rocks and ridges with cocked rifles a chance to pick them off.

The men of the train fired no shot and made no halt. Never a wagon moved faster or slower. It was a great plow cutting its way through the earth over all obstructions.

Anxious? Yes. Your brave man may even tremble in the presence of danger. It is only a drunkard or a fool who puts up his life against chance and betrays no emotion. Not anxious about the fourscore warriors galloping about them and now becoming derisive and defiant, but about what was to come farther on, and what the odds against them would be.

"Never halt in the presence of an enemy unless you fortify," says a military authority.

"So long as you are moving, the enemy cannot mass against any one point," says another.

An old veteran commanded the train and rode in advance of it. He saw the lay of the country changing, and as he reached a ridge he could look down and see where the attack would be made. The natural roadway ran down for a mile between dry gullies. These gullies had been scooped out by the heavy rainfalls of perhaps a century, for here the watershed ran sharply to the north for many miles.

The Indians had massed in these ravines and the train would be in a trap.

"Never do what your enemy hopes you will do," is another military maxim.

The captain made a rapid survey of the ground and turned to the north. Here was a plateau strewed with bowlders, but tolerably level. A battle must be fought. Here was the place to fight it.

It is midafternoon now. Come with me and I will show you a sight to be remembered forever. There is going to be a fight which men will talk of around hearthstones for the next twenty years.

and the unerring good taste of the public. To command universal admiration requires no small degree of merit and the merit of our couldn't be greater than it is. They stand examination and will also stand wear and look spic and span longer than any garments now offered. The superior of these suits isn't in cloth. They are as fine as the edge of a razor, as handsome as a figure of Adonis, as durable as snow in Labrador, and cost less than a good article of clothing can be bought for anywhere else.

AGE OF THE EARTH.

A FASCINATING STUDY THAT IS ELUCIDATING A GREAT MYSTERY.

The Science of Geology Shows That the Age of the World Varies Between 73,000,000 and 680,000,000 Years—How These Computations Are Made.

At the recent meeting of the British association a discourse was delivered by the president, Sir Archibald Gerkie, on one of the most interesting problems in modern science—the age of the world. Over a century has elapsed since James Hutton wrote his "Theory of the Earth," which was the first attempt to formulate a chronology of creation in accordance with the discoveries of science; since then knowledge has made vast strides, and his followers have access to a mass of information which he did not possess. Playfair and Kelvin improved upon his work, and now Gerkie and the school to which he belongs have gone beyond them.

Geologists have ascertained that the rate at which erosion takes place can be measured; by applying their scale to the sedimentary rocks they have formed a hypothesis as to the time which has elapsed since erosion began. To put the proposition in similar language, the surface of the globe is constantly wearing away under the influence of water and wind. The portions which are worn off are carried down to the sea or into hollows, where they are deposited and form sedimentary rocks. If we can ascertain how long it takes to form a sedimentary rock we can figure out when the progress of wearing away and redepositing began.

Sir Archibald states that on a reasonable computation the stratified rocks attain an average thickness of 100,000 feet. The material of which they consist was all washed down from high planes, deposited and left to stratify. By the inspection of river banks it is found that in places the surface of the land which has been carried down as sediment in rivers has been reduced at the rate of a foot in 730 years, while in other places, where the land was more stubborn or less flexible, it has taken 6,800 years to lower the surface one foot. The deposit must be equal to the denudation. Thus we find that while some of the sedimentary rocks have grown a foot in 730 years others have taken 6,800 years to rise that height. Thus the period of time that was required to build up 100,000 feet of sedimentary rock has varied according to locality from 73,000,000 years to 680,000,000 years. It follows that the active work of creation lasted for a cycle intermediate between these two figures. The cycle varied with endless succession of periods of disturbance by volcanic force and glacial action, and the frequent submersion of dry land, alternating with the emerging of continents out of the seas. These may have retarded the growth of sedimentary rocks, but they cannot have accelerated it.

A study of fossils teaches the steady uniformity with which the work of creation proceeded. Since man began to observe there has been no change in the forms of animal and vegetable life. A few species have disappeared—not one new species has been evolved. Not only do we find the fauna and flora of ancient Egypt as depicted on monuments which are probably 8,000 or 10,000 years old identical with those which are found in that country today, but shells which inhabited our seas before the ice age and grew in an ocean whose bed overlay the Rocky mountains are precisely the same species that are found in the Bay of Monterey and the waters of the Chesapeake. It is evident that there has been no essential change in the conditions of life since these animals and these vegetables were first created, yet how vast the shortest period which we can assign to the gap that divides us from that remote epoch!

Little by little the geologist is lifting the veil which covers the prehistoric record of our planet. The era which preceded the age of civilized man, with its vast rivers carrying down diluvial floods to the ocean, and the bursting forth of mountain ranges from contractions of the earth's crust has been painted to the life. But no one has exercised his pencil on that preceding age, when the forests made way for clumps of stunted birch and willow, incessant snowfalls covered the plains, glaciers crept down from the north, and gradually a vast sheet of ice half a mile thick drove mankind, with the mammoth and the reindeer, to those fortunate regions which, like California, escaped the agony of the last ice age.

Nor have we any distinct perception of that subsequent age when the ice melted or receded to the pole, or dense tropical jungle grew up in the morasses it had left, swamps steaming with tropical heat swarmed with uncouth batrachian and reptile life, trees of monstrous growth shed their shade over shiny pools and black ooze, and in the distance long mountain ranges whose fontanel had not yet closed, poured a never ceasing flood of lava down their sides. This is a page of history which is yet to be written, but the materials are accumulating, and the historian will not be long wanting.—San Francisco Call.

A Pathetic Death on Pike's Peak.

Several years ago, when the summit house on Pike's peak was used as a signal station, the occupants of the hut were a telegraph operator and a companion. Winter had set in with more than usual severity. Unexpectedly the telegraph operator was taken sick and failed so rapidly that the first day of his illness plunged him into delirium. The companion of the operator was not familiar with telegraphy. Their provisions were growing short.

The second night brought no relief. The sight of his raving, half starved comrade grew intolerable to the weary nurse, who one night went out on the mountain top. Scarcely had the door closed behind him than reason returned to the dying operator. With the little strength that he had retained he dragged himself to his instrument and flashed over the wire, down the mountain side, that his companion had been lost on the mountain and that he could live but a little while, but that they might yet be rescued if assistance started at once. Crawling back to his pallet the sender of the message died. The wanderer at length found his way back to the hut to have added to his cheerless surroundings the presence of death. At the sight of his lifeless comrade the last ray of hope faded, and he sank unconscious beside the dead operator.

With the first intimation that there was distress on the mountain top a party of willing men, mostly miners wintering at Colorado Springs, started for the summit. They reached the top after a day's weary travel, and just in time to resuscitate the still unconscious man, who in the end recovered.—Chicago Tribune.

A Momentary Delay.

At first blush it would seem to be an impossible feat for a pedestrian—a poor, defenceless woman, at that—to successfully bar three entrances to the Brooklyn bridge. It took place on the Brooklyn side one morning last week, when the wage workers were hurrying to the metropolis, and a large assembly was kept in a state of suspense for minutes that seemed ages.

To explain the feat accomplished, you remember how the entrances are arranged—a ticket office on either side, between them two iron parallel bars to guide you through. Between these railings is a space through which you pass on to the "chopping boxes," where tickets are deposited, but if you have to purchase them you pass between a rail and the box.

She was a gray haired old lady and she wished to buy a ticket. There would have been less difficulty had it not been for the umbrella. It was thrust under the old lady's arm as a man poses his umbrella when going up the "L" stairs—point to the rear and breast high.

The old lady stepped into the middle space, and while the umbrella swung round like a tollgate bar, closing the space behind her, she reached over to the ticket office and calmly proceeded to open her purse, fumble a roll of bills, finally select one, and with both arms stop the passing of pedestrians until a disgusted lot of humanity was dammed.

With the umbrella posed like an infantryman's bayonet fixed to repel cavalry the old lady and her gray hairs held the fort. At last her pennies and tickets had been picked up one by one. She gave way and the crowd surged around her like the floodtide around a shad pole in the North river.—New York Herald.

Few Men Die of Overwork.

Dr. Pye Smith holds that there is no fear of the ordinary man using his brains too much for health, and he does not believe that mental labor or honest work of any kind interferes with health or shortens life a day. He maintains that excessive eating is the abuse that tends to the injury of brain workers more than any other cause.

Many active brain workers have suddenly broken down and fancied that it was due to brain fatigue, when, as a matter of fact, it was due to over stuffing their stomachs. The furnace connection with mental machinery became clogged up with ashes and carbon in various shapes and forms, and as a result disease came, and before the case was fully appreciated a demoralized condition of the nervous system was manifested and the prosaic cause for the collapse was suppressed under the euphemistic "mental overwork."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Swallowing Abilities of Snakes.

The jaws of the chicken snake are hung on hinges that can be taken apart or displaced for the time being, as the case may be, and an entire Texas cottontail rabbit can be persuaded to enter, head and all, with little effort, and the body being made of india rubberlike material and very stretchable the kicking little animal soon finds a lodgment in the stomach. His snakeship then carefully resets his jaws so that his mouth assumes its normal size and blissfully reposes for the succeeding six hours. The powerful gastric juice does the balance, and no Texan can testify that he ever heard of a chicken snake suffering from indigestion or chronic dyspepsia. The capture and digestion of chickens, song birds, turkey eggs and rats constitute simple pastime to the chicken snake and does not call for a six hour layoff in feeding time.—Port Lavacaen.

An Experienced Artist.

Star—This is a very good play, but it will have to be revised considerably.

Dramatist—Impossible, sir.

Star—Oh, it must be. You make the hero appear in every act. That won't do. The hero must be taken out of the first act, and also out of the last.

Dramatist—What! Open and close the play without the hero?

Star—Certainly. You see I am my own manager, and I shall be busy in the box office during the first act, and very often busy with the sheriff during the last act.—New York Weekly.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

May 29th, 1892. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

ORDER FOR HEARING.

[First publication Dec. 1st. 1892.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 24th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Andrew Wardberg, deceased.

On receiving and filing the petition of Ed Wardberg, of the town of King, of the county of Polk, repsesenting, among other things, that Andrew Wardberg, late of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1892, at the county of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Erick O. Knutson, granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said court, on Wednesday, the 28th day of December, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston, the 24th day of November, 1892.

MORTGAGE ALE.

[First publication Dec. 1st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars ($300.00) which became due January 1st, 1892, upon a certain mortgage, d ly executed and delivered by Henry Steege, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Robert J. Montague, mortgagee, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1891, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1891, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book 49 of mortgages, on page 417, and the said Robert J. Montague having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and there is now justly due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of one thousand thirty-seven dollars ($1,037), and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section thirty-one (31), in township one hundred and fifty (150), of Range forty-six (46), excepting therefrom the west three hundred feet which is platted into lots, and the railroad right of way of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company; also excepting that portion lying on the northeast side of said railroad and within five hundred feet of the centre line of Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to Crookston, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 14th day of January, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said morgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st, A. D. 1892.

Attorney P. G. Falardeau of Red Lake Falls, is attending court.

See Tom Morris' jewelry before you select that ring for a holiday present for your best girl.

Attorney R. A. Wilkinson came up on Monday morning to attend to some railroad cases in court.

The Great Northern road put up a pile-driver on Tuesday for the work of piling to protect its embankment.

Priester & Co., are constantly receiving dry wood by the carload—and are selling it almost as fast as it comes.

C. Tandrin, of Gentilly, called on Monday to add his name to the growing subscription list of the JOURNAL.

A. J. Arnold has so far recovered as to be able to ride over to the city on Monday. He was feeling pretty well though extremely weak.

Mrs. W. B. Dawley sustained quite a severe injury by falling on the ice one day last week. She was unable to be out for several days.

The new addition to the Reckitt block is so far advanced as to show what like it will be. It will be an improvement to the locks of the building.

The German dramatic club gave a very pleasant hop on Saturday evening following an entertainment by the club. They say "Chicago" is a dandy actor.

Probably not all of East Grand Forks showed up on Monday morning when court was called, but 25 or 30 of her citizens did—all interested in cases in court.

Jim Greenhalgh was busy at work on Tuesday putting the pump in position for the purpose of pumping out the sewer. The siphon did not prove a howling success.

If you are hungry during court time, Bert's cafe, on Second street, will be found an excellent place to get a bite or a good square meal. Try Bert's new restaurant.

Mrs. E. M. Walsh and Mrs. W. B. Dawley entertained many of their lady friends at the residence of Mrs. Walsh on Thursday afternoon at a thimble bee and in the evening at cinch.

The work of putting in new flooring into the Crookston Mercantile store and Williams & Roberts store, in the McKinnon block, recently burned, was commenced on Monday and those rooms will soon be ready for business again.

From a private letter written to a friend of that lady in this city, the JOURNAL learns that Mrs. E. E. Bangs safely reached her destination in California in excellent health and likes her surroundings very much. Herself and brother intend to spend the winter traveling.

Read our new serial story "The Golden Carees," one of the most thrilling stories from the gifted pen of M. Quad, (Charles B. Lewis) commencing in this issue. Now is the time to subscribe for the JOURNAL and secure the new story entire. Every family should read the JOURNAL,

Senator H. Burkhardt arrived in the city on Monday morning. He expects to remain until his son Henry is able to travel and then take him to Wabasha until he recovers fully. The doctor says that if Henry continues to improve he can be moved sometime next week—Friday or Saturday. Speaking of the senatorial election next month the senator said he thought without a doubt that Davis would be re-elected.

Sheriff Grundysen returned Wednesday from California bringing with him C. L. Cummings, who is wanted for swindling farmers at East Grand Forks, by taking their wheat to store it in an elevator he was running, but instead of storing it he sold the wheat and departed for California with the proceeds. The amount of his swindlings are said to be about $8,000. On Thursday Cummings was brought before Judge Christianson in this city, but no counsel appeared for him and he waived examination and was committed to the district court to await the action of the grand jury.

L. J. Columbus has rented the opera house for another year. The terms upon which he gets it this year are such that the owner takes a share in the risks—heretofore Columbus paid a certain amount rent whether he did a paying or a losing business. During the past year Mr. Columbus has been indefatigable in his efforts to furnish first-class entertainments but he has not made a great fortune out of it. He has gained a fund of valuable experience during his first year that will enable him, with the prospects of better times to make a good thing for himself and to furnish the public with a choice class of entertainments. The JOURNAL hopes to see him succeed abundantly, and has no doubt but that he will if the public appreciates his efforts in their behalf.

Koeppe's Crookston Belle takes the cake.

W. J. Hillestad, of Fosston, is courting this week.

Auditor Webster has purchased a residence in the city.

Attorney Grindeland, of Warren, is attending Court.

The Crookston Belle—Koeppe's new cigar, is a daisy. Try it.

We will have plenty of music out of doors all next week. Watch for it.

Ask your dealer for the Crookston Belle—and take no other brand of cigar.

Reserved seats at Tom Morris' jewelry store Saturday morning for "Northern Lights."

United States District Attorney Hay and C. M. Fergusen of Minneapolis came in, Monday.

Mayor McAdam of East Grand Forks is in the city looking after the interests of his constituents.

Judge Gorham Powers of Granite Falls, and Stenographer Bornstedt, of Moorhead arrived Monday morning to open court.

Rev. J. G. Smith arrived from Duluth on Saturday morning and preached in the Congregational church morning and evening.

The Crookston Belle is what Koeppe calls his choice cigar. It is a leader for a fact and when you have smoked one you will desire no other.

Sam and D. L. Lusian returned on Saturday from a pleasant visit to relatives in Iowa. While there they attended the wedding of a sister. Sam says Iowa is a real nice state—to leave.

T. R. Bangs, F. C. Whitbeck, A. L. Anderson, W. B. Woods, F. A. Brown, C. H. Hillman, G. Christiansen and C. J. Fish were a Grand Forks party who registered at the Palace this week.

Miss Emma Millis was recently married at her home in Michigan to Charles Rurdy, of Glyndon, says the Glyndon News. Miss Millis was once a Polk county school teacher and has many friends in this city.

The North Dakota Milling Association that recently bought the Valley Roller mills of this place, has added another mill—this time it is the roller mill at Moorhead. They will put it in thorough repair at once.

Adolph Koeppe opened his new cigar store to the public this week. He has it fitted and furnished in elegant shape and wants his friends and the public generally to call when in need of choice goods in his line. Ask for the Crookston Belle.

Among those who stopped at the Commercial Monday were H. B. Laughlin, Geo. O'Reilly, Robert Brownlee, Fred Schriver and A. G. Rutledge of Fisher; W. D. Kelly, Geo. Chambers, John Driscoll, Dick White, P. O'Brien, Andy Ryan, Chas. McDonald, Mark Lampton, L. A. Sullivan and Hugh Quigley of East Grand Forks.

Pastor S. G. Swenson of the Aug. Lutheran church was pleasantly surprised last Friday evening while the church choir were practicing at his home. A number of the members of his congregation gathered and Mr. Peterson, on behalf of the congregation, presented him with a purse of $30.00, after which a very pleasant evening was spent.

For a sore throat there is nothing better than a flannel bandage dampened with Chamberlain's Plain Balm. It will nearly always effect a cure in one night's time. This remedy is also a favorite for rheumatism and has cured many very severe cases. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. wallace.

Tom Morris does not make a speciality of "selling out at cost" or less for any alleged excuse, but just keeps right on selling the very best goods in the market at a fair living profit. By the way, he has a large and elegant assortment of jewelry—just the thing for a nobby holiday present. Call and examine his stock.

Undoubtedly the largest and best repetory company that has ever visited this section of the country is the "Northern Lights Co." which has been engaged to play here one week commencing Monday, Dec. 12. The company consists of twenty people and carry a good band and orchestra. Their repetoire of plays consists of the following, "Wifes Honor," "Burr Oaks." "The Vagabond," "Man and Master," "Myrtle Fern," Michael Strogoff," "Noble Outcast," "Child of the Savannah," "A Southern Rose," "Hearts of Gold," "Nobody's Child," "Ranch King," "Lady Nell," "Mignon," and the two sensational melo-dramas written by Mr. Ennor one of the proprietors, "A Living Death," and "Master of Silence." We consider the management of the Grand very fortunate in securing this company. Mr. Columbus is always soliciting for the best, and this company is one of those that were not looked through here, but through the inducements offered by Mr. Columbus decided to try conclusions in this section, and it is hoped that, prices being only 25, 35 and 50 cents they will have a good attendance all week.

Hard and soft wood in any quantity, sawed into stove lengths and delivered to any part of the city, by Priester & Co. Office and yard on Main street, next to the Germania hotel.

Unless your time isn't worth more than 10 cents an hour you cannot afford to saw your own wood, when you can get it sawed and delivered by Priester & Co., at prices that the "buck-saw" cannot compete with.

If you have a farm or city property to sell, list with Red River Valley Loan and Investment company.

Call and see L. I. Benoit in his new store.

Williams & Roberts intend to dispose of their entire stock of damaged goods within the next 30 days. These goods were only damaged by water and are practically as good as new. They have $16,000 worth of dry goods, clothing, underwear, boots, shoes, rubbers, etc,, and will dispose of them regardless of cost. Opera block, Crookston, Minn.

Do you want a reliable time-keeper? See what Tom Morris can do for you.

Now fully ready for the holiday trade with a full stock of every thing to be present in a first-class jewelry store. TOM MORRIS the jeweler.

Attend the great fire sale now going on at Williams & Roberts' store in the opera block, and you will get some of the greatest bargains you ever heard of. Their stock was only damaged by water and a great deal of it is practically as good as new, but everything must be sacrificed or given away in 30 days.

Order your wood of Priester & Co., and they will saw and deliver it for you cheaper than you can get it done any other way.

Mrs. C. H. Saake arrived on Monday from a visit with relatives in Chicago and now Saake looks as happy as a king.

The warm spell of last week was very prolific of colds. Some imagine they have another attack of the grip. Mebbe they have.

It is expected that the Great Northern road will be completed to the coast and the golden spike be driven on the 20th of this month.

Everybody you meet speaks highly of the Jeffreys Lewis entertainment. Singular that such meritorious companies get such poor houses.

Engineer Fred Chapin spent a few days with friends in the city. Fred was in hopes to move to the city but finds that he will not be able to make it just now.

Miss Inez McGrew has engaged in reportorial work on the Times in Barnum's place. She will have to wear an awful big boot to quite fill his place, as Frank was a hustler from way back.

The Jeffreys Lewis Company played "Forget-Me-Not" to a small house on Thursday evening of last week. Miss Lewis, in the title role was superb, while Harry Mainhall, as Sir Horace Welby gave excellent support while the balance of the company was very much above the average. Miss Lewis, as an actress ranks with Margaret Matlier some even insisting that she is better. She amply deserved a big house and if she should come this way again we think she will have a much larger one.

Gentlemen, it will pay you to examine our stock of fall and winter caps before purchasing elsewhere. Something to please all classes.

A. STURE.

In selecting your holiday presents don't neglect to call at Tom Morris' jewelry store and examine his fine new stock. Everything in line. Prices right

Priester & Co., the wood yard proprietors, have put in a feed mill just to utilize the power which they do not need for sawing wood. In this way they can afford to do grinding at very low rates. Anyone having grinding to do should take advantage of this opportunity.

Having disposed of a large amount of their goods since they commenced their reduction sales Veronneau Adams have now decided to sell the balance AT COST, and they mean just what they say. Call and see if they don't.

Mrs. Herman Martin gave a pleasant cinch party to a number of her lady friends on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. John McKinnon and Mrs. R. J. Montague carried off the head prizes.

The Valley Roller mills have closed grinding operations for awhile pending the putting in of facilities for using water power and other improvements. The repairs will probably occupy a month's time.

The city hotels are all filled with guests, most of whom have business in court.

Mrs. Cora Lee received the cheering intelligence that her husband, Walter C. Lee, who was last spring placed in an insane asylum, was wholly recovered, and she left on Sunday evening to join him in Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Lee will spend the winter in the south.

We see by the papers that Locken & Holmboe are selling their cloaks at cost.

From a private letter from Tacoma we learn that John Sullivan is engaged in the livery business and doing well. Johnny has many friends in Crookston who will be glad to hear of his success.

Sam Wallace is preparing for Christmas by putting in an immense stock of holiday goods. He is using every inch of available space in his store, and has almost everything a person could desire for a Christmas present.

During the performance on Thursday evening Miss Lewis said something which the gallery gods approved very highly and they responded by a series of cat-calls and shrill whistles that were perfectly deafening. Miss Lewis threw up her hands deprecatingly and said: "O-o-o-o-h!" She did not make much of a demonstration and kept right along with her part but it was effective. She was not again disturbed in the same manner during the entire evening.

The habit that some have of putting trap doors in the sidewalk and then keeping said doors open two-thirds of the time is very annoying to pedestrians when they have to get off the walk and, like enough, wade in deep snow. One place we wot off was so obstructed by a large pile of wood and two trap doors as to render it impossible to get along at all and yet those who were responsible for the blockade didn't seem to think they were doing anything illegal. Perhaps they were not but it looks that way to us.

A. B. Nelson, of Warren, Minnesota is a man after our own heart. When J. P. went to California the JOURNAL was still sent to his address in Warren and this fall we sent our statement to Warren with the rest of 'em, but did A. B. remain quiet and coolly ignore the bill or try to sneak out of paying it? Oh, no! He is not built that way because he is a MAN, so he just sent in his little remittance even though the paper had not been sent in his name and he also spoke words of commendation and cheer. We heartily wish every subscriber on our list was as manly as is A. B. Nelson, of Warren.

Charlie Misner is still buying stock but is not trusting to his own judgment as he did once, which fact is made apparent by a box which our reporter saw in front of Misner's barber shop on Wednesday. On the box was a placard bearing the following legend:

> To Chas. Misner, Esq.; This box contains two hens (2) and one rooster (1). E. O. FLANDERS."

Mrs. I. U. Jennings will offer everything in the line of millinery at greatly reduced rates to reduce her stock to make room for new goods. The ladies should make a note of this fact and call at Mrs. Jennings' store on Robert street'

I own and control my business and no double profits are therefrom exacted; that is, you do not pay one profit to the ostensible owner and another to the alleged propietor, as is in vogue by some competitors. All my goods are bought on the cash basis and for that reason I am in position to continue to undersell all, and therefore my store is the safest and most economical place to buy your watches, clocks, silverware etc.

Citizens who have ordered photos of their buildings from the traveling photographers have probably done so because of the way they were "worked," and not out of a desire to discourge our home photographers, who can do as good work, if not better, than any traveling artist. These artists—who represent a St. Paul concern—plant their machine in front of a business house, and then politely ask those inside to step out for a minute. This request is complied with, a negative is taken, and the artist moves to the next building. In a few days the artist comes around with a proof and the customer is induced to take from one to a dozen photos. It is simply a case of "hustling"—forcing something on the people which they wouldn't otherwise order. But nevertheless it is an injustice to our home photographers, who contribute their share to the support of the city.

The Water Power and Light Co. have been having worlds of trouble at the new power house caused by saw dust that has been thrown into the river at the saw mill. They have been obliged to do a great deal of dredging to get rid of the stuff and don't seem to be out of the woods yet.

After the Railroad Company.

On November 23d Karl Skjeptad purchased a first-class railroad ticket at the Great Northern office from Crookston to St. Hilaire, and boarded the train, which was just starting, but after having got on board he discovered that there was no first-class passenger car in the train, but only a car divided into two compartments one provided with seats and the other used as a baggage car. He found all the seats occupied and was compelled to stand up in the baggage car. When the conductor came around to collect tickets he informed him that he held a first-class ticket but would not deliver it up until furnished with a seat, and the conductor thereupon stopped the train and ejected him from the car about six miles from Crookston, from which place he had to walk to town. He has now through his attorney H. Steenerson brought suit for $1000 damages for the wrongful expulsion from the train and the refusal of company to furnish him with transportation as they were in duty bound to do under the contract.

A few more such suits would probably bring the impecunious management of this road to time, as it must be admitted that the accommodations they furnish on their branch lines are not only inadequate, but in many instances simply disgraceful.

Poisoned by Scrofula.

Is the sad story of many lives made miserable through no fault of their own. Srofula is more especially than any other a hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Arising from impure and insufficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, which are composed of white tissues; there is a period of foetal life when the whole body consists of white tissues, and therefore the unborn child is especially susceptible to this dreadful disease. But there is a remedy for scrofula, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by its powerful effect on the blood, expels all trace of the disease gives to the vital fluid the quality and color of health. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not accept any substitute.

House for Rent.

G. W. Peake's residence, corner of Elm and Fourth streets, is for rent. Possession can be given immediately. Apply to owner. [25 tf]

The Grand Jury closed its labors on Monday, and most of the members left for home at once.

The court opened on Monday morning with Judge Mills presiding, Judge Powers being obliged to go home to attend court in his own district this week. Judge Mills will finish the week on criminal cases.

Last week a few jolly Crookstonites organized a raid on Wm. Heidrich, out in the country. Although Heidrich was completely taken by surprised he managed to get there with both feet and entertained his friends in a very handsome manner. The company returned at a late hour declaring that they had had the best time they ever want anywhere.

O. H. Bang, foreman of the Grand Jury, left for home on Tuesday morning, but did not forget ere he left to call in and set that subscription ahead a year. Ole said that while he had not made his fortune this year in wheat he has done well on the farm, having had a good crop of oats and barley and livestock. As a source of revenue this winter he is selling farmers on the prairie 2,000 cords of wood that he cut last winter. He does not haul a stick of it, but sells it right in the woods at $2 and $3 per cord. He is having a lot cut for next winter's use. Ole says he is making more clear money on his farm than he ever made in the saloon and likes the business far better.

A trip by our reporter to the stables of Peterson Bros. & Warninger on Tuesday showed their horses all nicely ensconced in winter quarters, as well as some horses that Dr. Warninger had in hospital for veterinary treatment. In addition to warm, comfortable stables, wherein each animal has plenty of room to turn around, stand up or lie down as it chooses, there are two roomy yards, enclosed by a high board fence, in one of which the animals have free access to hay or straw as suits their fancy, and where they may exercise at will. The firm has just received the well-bred pacing mare, Jessie Green, record 2:26, owned by Jim Brennan of Milbank, South Dakota, that was on the grounds at the Association meeting last fall, and which many of our readers saw. It speaks well for the racing qualities of Ham Nut when horsemen will send as far as Brennan has for his use, and shows to those who may have been disposed to cavil that we have at least one enterprising firm in our midst who have the sand necessary to buy and keep such animals. It is beyond doubt that Peterson Bros. & Warninger have some choice animals in their stables, which is proved by the pains taken by breeders who understand their business, and the boys say their business has been pretty good for the past year, and we have no doubt it will continue to improve as the years go by. The boys deserve it at least.

"Go tell your neighbors" they can buy furniture at cost at I. U. Jennings' Furniture store.

DISTRICT COURT.

Resume of the Business transacted in District Court since our Last Issue.

The Grand Jury Return Several Endictments, and Were Discharged by the Judge.

This Week Judge Mills Occupied the Bench—Next Week Judge Egan

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8th, 1892.

When our last issue went to press we left the now celebrated case of Beauchaine vs. McKinnon et al in a kind of "continued-in-our-next" condition. The arguments were somewhat lengthy (necessarily so,) and the judge did not wish to send the jury out for the night. The JOURNAL wishes to congratulate Mr. Ed. George upon his splendid summing up to the jury; his speech was clear, logical and very forcible, and had much influence upon the final result. As soon as court convened Thursday morning, Judge Powers instructed the jury in a long, careful and impartial charge. The jury thereupon retired and in about an hour returned, declared that they had agreed, and that their verdict was in favor of the plaintiff for $592.76; the costs on the defendants will amount to about $75 besides. Vale Beauchaine vs. McKinnon!—for a time.

Next! Webb vs. Fisher, a quarrel on account of hay and wood and mowing and harvesting. It was an all round, free for all fight without gloves; both sides claimed a foul, and Fisher's attorney insisted that one of his witnesses was hippodroming the benefit of the other side. Mr. Watts, the attorney for Isaac, finally secured a knock-down, and the jury, who acted as reference, gave the fight, and $104.75 to the plaintiff and awarded him the championship of Beltrami. See you again.

A very extraordinary case indeed was No. 15, Lambert vs. Bank of Warren, which was called after the jury had retired in the last case. The plaintiff, who owned a note against a man in Marshall county, claimed that he lost it, that it was found by some one, and that the bank had it for collection. The bank answered and proved that one Wolcott who had sent the note had bought it from one Emerson; this latter swore that he bought ft from one McAdams and that the plaintiff afterwards told him that he, plaintiff, had sold it to McAdams. The last named gentleman played the part of the celebrated missing-link. When speculation upon the important question, where is McAdams? was at its fever heat, court adjourned until,

When the judge took a guess at it in his charge. Then the jury went out and tried to solve the conundrum, and not being able to find Mac, found for the plaintiff for the value of the note, $150.82. To the first correct solution of this prize puzzle delivered at this office if accompanied by $1.50 cash, the JOURNAL will be sent free for one year.

The case thereupon called was La Due & Co., vs. Watkins & Co., for non-deliverance of goods bought by Mr. La Due and for charging a higher price for other goods than the contract stipulated. The case was closely tried by Mr. Miller for plaintiff and Messrs. Watts and Kent (the latter of the Indiana Bar) for defendant.

SATURDAY, DEC. 10th, 1892.

The above case was argued, and the jury after being charged found for the plaintiff the amount of $23.39.

One of the most interesting cases to the legal fraternity was the one entitled state of Minnesota against St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railway, wherein Polk county attempted to tax certain lands included in the old St. Paul & Pacific land grant and afterwards transferred to the defendant. The case was argued in a masterly manner by Mr. Watts, who had been retained by Polk county, and by Mr. R. A. Wilkinson who represented the defendant. Judge Powers held that the defendant was entitled to a judgment and found accordingly. It is believed the county will appeal the case to the supreme court.

The last case tried Saturday night was that of Permain vs. County Commissioners, appeal by the county from an account allowed by the defendants for services as architect on the county jail. The appeal seemed to have been taken only for delay as no evidence was introduced on the part of defendant; and Judge Powers after hearing all the facts presented granted the plaintiff the relief asked for in the account.

MONDAY, DEC. 12th, 1892.

Court convened at 10 o'clock, Judge Mills presiding.

Case No. 22, Reynolds vs. Davis, was by consent dismissed without costs.

No. 64, in re-application of Peter Lepson to vacate townsite, was tried before the court and the relief prayed for granted. This was an "ex-parte" proceeding,—one on behalf of one party only—to vacate a portion of the plat of South Crookston. As a result South Crookston is relegated to the more modest position of ordinary farm land.

The grand jury finished its labors and was discharged. Up to that time it had returned the following indictments, besides those given by the JOURNAL last week, Mr. Johnston, grand larceny second degree; the same, burglary third degree; C. L. Cummings, grand larceny second degree; the same, grand larceny first degree; the same, another grand larceny first degree; the same, another grand larceny first degree; John Wayne, grand larceny second degree; James Fisk, grand larceny first degree; Peter Bakke, selling mortgaged property; Thos. Nicholson and John Connelly, carnal knowledge of children; K. C. Norswig and Ole O. Rude, grand larceny second degree; the same two, petit larceny; Torkel Hailand and Johannes Hailand assault second degree. The following were indicted for selling liquor without a license: A. Gilmore, Ole Bjorge, Gunder Bjorge, Ole Espeland, Gunsten Jorgenson, and John J. Shannon.

The following were discharged by the court, the grand jury having investigated the charges against them and found them not true. Doc McDaniels charged with burglary; W. H. Hale and James Ryan, charged with grand larceny, and Andrew Olson, charged with grand larceny second degree.

The many prisoners were thereupon arraigned in court, all of them pleading not guilty.

The case of State vs. Con Davis charged with assault in the first degree was then commenced. Davis shot at a man named McGuire in East Grand Forks for striking him in the face, but without hitting McGuire. The evidence was short, the arguments also, the jury thought the punishment ought to be the same, and found defendant guilty in the second degree with a recommendation of mercy. The crowd that listened to the case thought the jury was "just right."

LEGAL LUNCH.

Judge Powers departed last Saturday for his home in Granite Falls where he will hold a term of court during the next week, and the attorneys, court officers and jurors unite in their praise of Judge Powers as a learned lawyer, courteous gentleman and genial companion. Polk county would be glad to have another visit by the Judge.

Everybody was happy last Monday to see our own Judge Mills here again. The judge has been busy finishing up his work in Moorhead before January 1st, when his term expires. After that time he is Assistant Attorney General of Minnesota. It is to be hoped that Judge Mills will not leave this part of the state for good.

Sheriff Grundysen is having as hard a lot of criminals in his charge as has ever been congregated for any term. He showed fine pluck in jumping from a train and running 25 miles an hour in order to catch an escaping prisoner. Arne, is all right if he is having some hard luck.

Judge Powers paid Deputy Clerk of Court Sortedahl, many compliments for his efficiency and correctness in keeping the court records.

Court Reporter Van Bornstedt says that "this is, by special request, positively his last performance in this district."

Attorney Kent, State Senator of Indiana, was in attendance upon court during the last week. He expressed his surprise at the enormous development of the Red River Valley.

The gentleman called in legal lingo "the plaintiff" is in luck so far; he has won every case tried before a jury.

It seems that Mr. Defendant is not in it so far.

Everybody breathes easier, grand jury has adjourned.

Blind pigs are again being marketed. In Hog Signo Vinces.

Criminal cases this week.

The comptroller's report to the finance committee was read to the council.

The chief of the fire department appeared before the council and asked that the entire amount in the firemen's relief fund be turned over to the fire department.

Moved by Alderman Childs seconded by Alderman Watts that the request of the firemen be granted and that the proper officers be instructed to draw an order for the amount payable to the fire department.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Morrisey, Monroe, Marlette, Walker, Watts, Cromb. Negative none.

Declared carried.

The city engineer presented a report upon the condition of the mouth of the main sewer which was read to the council.

Alderman Jennings excused.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Morrissey and Alderman Watts,.

Resolved: That a committee of three members of the city council, of whom the president of the council shall be one, be appointed with power to act, to take such action as they may find necessary, of putting in a temporary sewer underneath the railroad track at the end of Third street which will continue the present sewer system, and be made large enough to enable a permanent sewer to be built therein at some future time.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative, Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jerome, Morrisey, Monroe, Marlette, Walker, Watts, Cromb. Aldermen voting in the negative, none. Declared carried.

The president appointed as that committee: Morrisey, Watts.

On motion the matter of the attending to the pumping and work on the sewer be left to the same committee.

On motion council adjourned.

Don't Eat Potato Skins.

The skin of a nicely served baked potato is certainly a temptation to any who have tasted it, but it is just as well to resist the temptation. Quite a large percentage of potatoes are shipped in from a distance after having been preserved, packed away carefully to avoid sprouting, which quickly spoils a stack of potatoes and leaves them almost worthless. In some parts of the country sulphuric acid is used to make sprouting impossible. The potatoes are dipped into a bath with some of the acid dropped in, and as a result the little eyes are killed, and any intention of sprouting is nipped in the bud. It is said that the acid cannot possibly penetrate the skin, and this is no doubt true. At the same time enough of the poison may have been absorbed by the skin itself to make eating it, even after careful washing, decidedly dangerous.

Pointers About Ostriches.

In each wing of an ostrich twenty-six long white plumes grow to maturity in eight months. In the male these are pure white, while those of the female shade to ecru or gray. The short feathers are plucked for tips, and each wing furnishes seventy-five of these. The tail feathers are of a deep old ivory color, and sixty-five of these have a commercial value. In a late plucking at the Coronado ostrich farm nearly 800 feathers were obtained from one bird, which, when curled and dressed, will be worth sixty-five dollars. The female ostrich lays seventy eggs a year.

CALLS FOR TROOPS.

AGENT SIMMONS, OF THE BELKNAP AGENCY, ASKS ASSISTANCE.

An Attempt to Arrest an Indian Murderer Causes an Outbreak—One Soldier Has Already Been Killed and Several Others Wounded.

HELENA, Mon., Dec. 12.—A dispatch from Agent Simons of the Belknap agency to Governor Toole reads:

"Send troops at once and notify the secretary of war at Washington. Several Indian soldiers have been wounded; one killed."

It is believed here that other Indians have become excited and joined the defense of the Indian who wounded Agent Simons.

ANOTHER REPORT.

Dispatches Confirming the Indian Outbreak Received at Great Falls.

GREAT FALLS, Mon., Dec. 12.—Indefinite rumors of an Indian outbreak at Fort Assiniboine, which were disputed, have reached here. A dispatch received later confirm the facts. On Saturday an Assiniboine Indian named Big Mouth was shot and killed by a young buck of the same tribe, whose name is not known. The murderer gathered his friends and fortified a log cabin near by. Agent Simons was notified and proceed to the seat of trouble with a posse. Advancing upon the cabin the men were fired upon by the occupants, Alone Horse being killed and Simons wounded in the leg. The white men are now beseiging the cabin and the Indians, about a dozen in all, say they will not be captured alive.

RAIDED BY ROBBERS.

Two Wyoming Towns Receive Unwelcome Visits from Masked Men.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 12.—At sundown Sunday evening a couple of heavily armed men, dressed like cowboys and wearing masks made from bits of canvass, rode into the town of Gillette bent on robbery. The visitors forced their ponies into Tony Christensen's saloon and dance hall. Tony handed the fellows $350 and four pistols. Five other men and a couple of women in the place were robbed. After taking a drink and treating everybody the visitors retired to the street. One of them proposed to rob the postoffice and rode inside the little place. He found a girl behind the window and when she told him there was no money on hand he rode out. The pair raided another saloon and a grocery store, as they had done Christensen's. Eight or ten citizens who came out to see what was the matter were held up on the street. By this time Christensen had a small posse organized. The highwaymen did not care for a fight and rode off in a hurry, going south with bullets flying after them. They were in Gillette only half an hour.

ANOTHER RAID.

In This One Two are Killed and One Wounded by the Bandits.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 12.—Three masked men entered J. A. Case's saloon near Sheridan Monday night and after ordering all those present to hold up their hands opened fire. Daniel Sullivan, who was playing poker with A. W. King, was killed and the latter was seriously wounded. The noise brought Case to the door and he was shot down by the robbers, one of them shooting him in the head after he had fallen. The men secured $250 and several watches and revolvers and made their escape on horseback.

CHANGE FOR THE WORSE.

Senator Gibson's Death is Now Momentarily Expected.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Dec. 13.—A change for the worse has taken place in the condition of Senator Gibson and his death is now momentarily looked for. His condition has been such for several days past as to cause some hopes for his recovery, but those hopes have been entirely dispelled by this change. The attending physicians do not believe the senator can survive the relapse, as he is extremely weak. His relatives and friends now have no hopes of his recovery. He is not expected to live through the night, as his doctor says he is liable to die now at any moment.

Blaine Better.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Mrs. Blaine said that Mr. Blaine was very much improved. The recent relapse in Mr. Blaine's condition was brought on by taking a ride through the city. He caught cold and was compelled to take to his bed again, where he has been ever since.

Declined to Say Anything.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Monsignor Satolli absolutely declined to say anything in regard to dispatches sent from St. Louis, stating that his mission to the United States had been unsuccessful and that he had been recalled, or to signify by contradiction similar statements made, apparently, only for the purpose of obtaining notoriety at the expense of the church. Dr. O'Gorman, however, said that Monsignor Satolli had not resigned and had not been recalled and did not expect to be recalled. Further, that he was simply carrying out the instructions he had received from the pope.

Fully Identified the Murderer.

JACKSON, Mich., Dec. 12.—George Taylor, the ex-convict released from the prison here Dec. 1, has been fully identified as the murderer of Mary Comely of Niles, Mich., who was killed last Wednesday night in her home in that village. The revolver with which Miss Comely was killed was sold to Taylor by a Jackson pawnbroker. He served a term in prison here for robbing Miss Comely several years ago and revenge was doubtless his motive for the murder. Taylor is still at large.

WAS POISON USED?

Reported Conspiracy to Kill Homestead Non-Union Men.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 11.—A Sunday paper published a startling story of a conspiracy to poison by wholesale the non-union men at Carnegie's Steel plant at Homestead and as a result it is alleged several persons lost their lives while scores of others are suffering from the effects of the poisonous drug. Developments, it is said, implicate members of the advisory committee, members of the Amalgamated association and officers of other labor organizations sympathizing with the locked out men at Homestead. Nine or more persons are now under arrest, ostensibly on less serious charges but really for the purpose of averting suspicion until others in the alleged conspiracy could be apprehended. The only name given is Robert Beatty, who was arrested at Louisville. It is stated that the chief cook inside the Homestead mills confessed to having placed poison in the food prepared for non-union men; that he did so at the instigation of the strikers' committees and that he was also under pay from them as well as from the Carnegie company. If he caused deaths and sickness sufficient to frighten the non-union men from the mill and compel its closing he said he was to receive $5,000. Two cooks whom he engaged in his plot it is stated became frightened and informed Mr. Frick of the crime. This led to the arrest of the chief cook, and as stated above, he made a full confession. During the time the meals were prepared inside a number of the men became sick and Charles Glosser died two weeks after going to Homestead. Mr. Frick positively refused to be interviewed on the subject.

E. I. Beck, counsel for the Carnegie company, was seen and confirmed the story of the poisoning. He says his information is that at least six died from the poisoning. A prominent druggist and physician are implicated. The food was given to a dog and it died in a few minutes. Developments will probably be made in a few days.

The coroner has not been notified. He will go to Homestead to investigate the cause of the death of Isaac Juries, who died suddenly about two weeks ago. Juries was a witness on the Critchelow case. The coroner is of the opinion that death was due to alcoholism.

No Evidence of Poison.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 11.—Superintendent Cowan, of the West Pennsylvania hospital, said that about five or six cases from Homestead were received from Homestead but they were of men injured in the mills or victims of diseases resulting from natural causes. "We have no cases," he said, "where there were indications of poison." Dr. Shields said there was no evidence of poison in any cases received at his institution during the Homestead trouble.

SAY IT IS ABSURD.

Amalgamated Officials Ridicule the Homestead Poison Story.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 12.—With the exception of those directly interested in the prosecution of the ex-strikers of Homestead, few persons can be found who credit the story that non-union men were poisoned by locked out men and others. Amalgamated officials, ex-employes of the Carnegie Steel company and people generally, ridicule the story. They say that even though it be true, as alleged, that Beatty and certain other individuals were parties to a scheme to poison non-union workmen, it is absurd to suppose that any prominent Homestead strikers, business men or members of the famous advisory committee, would permit himself to be drawn into such a villianous plot to take human life.

O'Donnell Says It's False.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 13.—Hugh O'Donnell, the ex-leader of the Homestead strikers, was interviewed in jail on the subject of the poisoning of non-union men at Homestead. O'Donnell denounces the reports as false with the request that his friends at once take steps for a thorough investigation of the charges.

WILL ELECT A DEMOCRAT.

Colonel Harris, of Kansas, Says the Next Senator Will Not Be a Republican.

CHICAGO, Dec. 13.—Colonel A. H. Harris, of Fort Scott, chairman of the straight-out Democrat committee of Kansas, and J. B. Crouch, editor of the Atchison Times, are at the Leland hotel on their way to New York to consult with the Democratic senators who are looking after the interests of the party in senatorial contests. These two Kansas Democrats say there is no effort on the part of the Republicans to elect one of their own members senator from Kansas, and they say the control of the legislature has passed from their hands.

"The next senator from Kansas will be a Democrat," said Mr. Crouch. "Attempts to combine Democrats and Populists will fail. In my opinion the straight Democrats will run a candidate acceptable to the Republicans. As it will be impossible to elect a Republican they will prefer to be represented by a straight out Democrat than by a mugwump or Populist. The Republicans have already given up hope of electing a member of their own party, and all talk in the newspapers of their attempting to steal the legislature is without foundation."

Died from Poison.

PARIS, Dec. 13.—The Temps states that the first examination of the remains of Baron Reinach proves that he died from the effects of poison and not from apoplexy, which was at first given as the cause of death.

Another Plan for the Conference.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 12.—Banker Strauss, of Frankfort, has come to the conclusion to submit a plan to the conference. Each country is to keep a separate gold reserve of $25,000,000 in its treasury, and exports and imports of bullion are to be merely indicated by cable.

Always Equal to the Emergency.

No sooner does a man wish for something in the Railroad line than the Northern Pacific Railroad is on hand to furnish it. This time it is Canadian Winter Excursions. Upon November 29th, December 6th, and any day from December 13th to 22nd, and again on December 27th, any man or woman in North Dakota or Northern Minnesota can buy a round trip ticket to Montreal, good for 90 days, for only $40.

Any person living in Manitoba can do the same thing, on any day from November 28th to December 31st. By payment of very reasonable amounts extra, other trips can be added to this, and tickets extended. In addition to all this, the Northern Pacific will, in connection with the Wisconsin Central, run through Pullman Tourist Sleeping cars, on November 29th, December 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th, to connect with a special train, which will leave St. Paul upon arrival of Northern Pacific train in the morning, and run through to Chicago, by daylight, arriving there in time to connect with all trains for Canadian points leaving there that night.

This special train is for the sole pleasure and accommodation of the Canadian Winter Excursionists, has a parlor car attached, and the charge for berth in sleeping car and seat in parlor car to Chicago is only $2.00. This practically gives the Canadian Winter Tourist the earth, only he doesn't get it fenced in. By buying these winter excursion tickets, you get a fine opportunity to visit the world's fair gronnds and buildings, and see what a wonderful place it is there. All information, maps, tickets etc., can be obtained of any agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, by either writing or calling personally.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

Lane's Medicine Moves the Bowels Each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of the state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

Cheap Excursions to Canada.

Low round trip tickets will be on sale by the Great Northern from Crookston, Grand Forks, and stations north to boundary and west to Minot, to points in Ontario, Quebec New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, on Nov. 29th, Dec. 9th, Dec. 13th to 22nd inclusive, and Dec. 27th, 1892. Tickets good for 90 days, with transit limits of 15 days each way, going and returning. This will allow holders to stop in the Twin Cities, in Chicago to see the wonderful buildings of the World's Fair, and other points enroute. Extension of time beyond 90 days made at small additional cost. For particulars and tickets see W. W. Fegan, agent at Crookston. [32-36]

EDITOR DANA, of the New York Sun is talked of as a successor to Senator Hiscock in the United States senate. If the New Yorkers are looking for a statesman to represent them. Dana is the man they want.

THE St. Hilaire Spectator in its issue of December 7th, gravely remarks: "A hot campaign is now on!" What's the matter, Harry, is that one of your brilliant jokes or havn't you heard that the "hot campaign" was over a month ago?

THE result of the next campaign depends in a very large degree upon the action of the incoming legislature. If the republican party rises above every petty consideration and legislates in the interests of the people that party will easily retain control, and we think they will.

M. S. Converse, of Detroit, has been appointed military storekeeper to fill the unexpired term of the present incumbent who has resigned. As this was done with the approval of governor-elect Nelson, Mr. Converse will no doubt continue right along after Mr. Nelson is inaugurated.

ONE of the reforms proposed by the democrats is the fixing of the president's term at six years, and limiting each incumbent to one term. Mr. Springer, who brought this matter up in committee last session, is again agitating it. Although this system would have its drawbacks, it would probably meet with the approval of the people generally.

A BILL has been introduced in congress to enact a law for the convening of congress on the first Monday in March instead of the first Monday in December. If the measure should become a law, Cleveland would get rid of the extra session dilemma—something which he would undoubtedly appreciate. The last election would indicate that the people want a change—free trade—or low tariff—or something—and they ought to have it.

APPEARANCES indicate that the republicans will organize the legislature and have full control of both branches. They have a good working majority in the house and lack only three in the Senate of a majority over the combined forces of the democrats and alliance and these will be more than made up by the alliance senators who are disgusted with Donelly's tactics. No doubt Lieutenant-Governor Clough will appoint the Senate committees this term.

THE INTERNATIONAL monetary convention, now in session is not liable to accomplish anything on the silver question and the matter will go back to each respective government for adjustment upon their own basis. The plan suggested by the Rothschilds is so obviously in favor of England as against every other power as to carry in itself the elements of its own defeat. Uncle Sam could not entertain that sort of aracket.

The St. Paul Globe, after having made a wretched failure of the democratic campaign is now trying to dictate the course the republican party shall pursue in relation to its own affairs, and just now it is giving it out cold that Senator Davis must not be re-elected, and is just now busy selecting a candidate for us. By a fortuitous combination of circumstances that question is now of the Globe's business—the republicans will attend to that matter to suit themselves.

Maj. Charles A. Ruffee has taken charge of affairs at White Earth as agent. Maj. Ruffee brings to the work a life-long experience with the Indians and understands them like a native, and moreover he has had experience as an agent on that reservation giving great satisfaction while there and being displaced by a political turn of the wheel. His appointment was a good one for the interests of the Indians and if Grover's head is level Mr. Ruffee will be retained.

IN a letter to the press, General Passenger agent Kenyon—who has made the name of the "Burlington" a household word throughout the west and northwest by his persistent advertising—shows his familiarity with the trials of the average newspaper man, by the following inquiry: "How have the subscription list and advertising been panning out? We hope there has been less knotty cordword, fewer frost-bitten pumpkins, less "trading it out," and more cash. We hope so, because we rejoice in the general prosperity of our newspaper friends."

CHATTEL MORTGAGE LAW.

The case of Powell vs. Gagnon which has been appealed to the supreme court from Marshall county, and which is to be submitted upon the printed arguments of the attorneys for the respective parties on the 15th inst, involves questions of law of more than ordinary public interest.

The facts are briefly these: Gagnon was sued upon two notes for $872 each given in part payment of a steam threshing rig. The notes were secured by a chattel mortgage upon the machine, and when the first note was due the mortgagee seized the property under the mortgage and went through the form of a sale conducted by his agent and bid in the property for $500—and credited the amount upon the note last due, and also brought suit to collect the other note. The defendant answered and claimed that the pretended sale was void for several reasons. Among these, want of proper notice and that sale should have been conducted by a constable or sheriff in the same manner as execution sales, in order to authorize the mortgagee to bid in the property, and set up that, plaintiff having taken the property and disposed of it without a proper sale, had thereby taken it in full satisfaction of the debt, and had waived all claim for a deficiency between the amount of mortgage debt and the value of the property. The court, (Judge Mills) held that the mortgage sale was void, and that the mortgagee having taken the property and disposed of it without a sale as provided for in the mortgage and prescribed by law, had thereby elected to take the property in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt, and directed a verdict in favor of defendant. The case was conducted on the part of the defendant by H. Steenerson, and A. Grindeland, of Warren. The plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, and the JOURNAL has just finished printing a brief of 24 pages prepared by Messrs. Steenerson, Grindeland and Stanton, in behalf of the defendant.

Should the decision of the district court in favor of the defendant be affirmed it would probably be good news to hundreds of people in this county whose property has been taken from them on chattel mortgages and sold for a song—or less than enough to pay the expenses, leaving the debt larger than before. We are informed that in nine cases out of ten these chattel mortgage sales have been illegally conducted and in all such cases under said decision the mortgagee will be held to have taken the property in full satisfaction of the debt, and to have waived all claim for any deficiency.

THE MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Toledo Weekly Blade.

The Rothschild proposition in the Brussels monetary conference, is simply an effort to make the United States help Great Britain out of her financial troubles with India, growing out of the steady decline in silver. It has been practically admitted in that conference that if we had not passed the silver law of 1890, by which we purchase 54,000,000 ounces of silver bullion per year, Great Britain would now have such a demand for legislative action that it could not be resisted. Were it not for that law, she would now be ready to unite with other nations in attempting an international settlement of the silver question. Senator Sherman admits that the law did not do what he anticipated—that is, to increase the price; and he now strongly favors its repeal.

The Rothschild proposition, which is in reality that of England, is that the European countries represented in the conference shall unite to purchase every year silver bullion to the amount of £5,000,000, equal to nearly $25,000,000; that these purchases shall continue for five years, under the express condition that the United States shall, for the same time, continue her present purchases of 54,000,000, per year. This is making the United States a catspaw with a vengeance. All the European countries, including Great Britain, would take only a little more than half as much as we purchase. If at any time before the end of five years, the price rises to 43d. per ounce, the purchases are to be suspended.

The underlying idea is that these purchases of silver will bring the price up permanently to that figure. This is a fallacy. Our own silver legislation shows that the theory is false that buying silver and storing it up will increase its price. The theory is based on two wrong ideas. The first is that the government becomes a consumer of silver, when in fact it is only its custodian. The other is, that silver can be advanced in price by creating for it a periodical demand for storage purposes. This silver is not bought to be consumed. If the English proposition at Brussels should be adopted, all the silver bought under it would simply be put into circulation in some form. This would not alter its value. It could still be used for any purpose that any person might choose. The men who use silver in manufacturing are its only consumers. When their work has been put upon it, it has necessarily received additional value. It can not then profitably be melted up to transform it into other objects. But so long as it is merely bullion, or stamped into coin, no added value is given. It is simply that much more added to the quantity in sight for consumption. It is consumption alone which can add to prices.

Hence, it will be seen that the Rothschild plan would not effect what is intended. The best thing to do is for the United States to promptly repeal the clause of the silver law of 1890, and to do it quickly that the conference will be spurred up by new instructions to the representatives of each government, to formulate some radical plan for disposing of the silver question. That plan must be the establishment of a new coinage ratio, agreeing pretty closely with the present market ratio, and the admission of the white metal to free coinage by all the countries at the new ratio.

Fergus Falls Journal.—The result of the election in this state must be very unsatisfactory to those who expected that the people's party was to become a permanent party. The late election shows that its days are numbered, for a new party can never stand it to meet with such losses as the party has met with this year. The official vote shows that Donnelly ran 20,000 behind Mr. Owen's vote in 1890. But the decrease in the vote is not due to Mr. Donnelly's unpopularity, for in this congressional district that exceedingly popular candidate, H. E. Boen, got but 165 plurality, when two years ago Mr. Halvorson got nearly 7,000. Again Mr. Weaver got but 30,000 votes in the state as against the 58,000 given Owen in 1890. It shows plainly that the people are already tiring of the new party and are drifting back into the two old parties. The fact that the people's party did not increase its vote this year is fatal to its hopes. Two years more will wind it up except as a local party.

St. Paul Dispatch:—The official returns for the vote on Minnesota congressional candidates were received at the office of the secretary of state last week and the count shows that Boen's plurality in the Seventh district is only 85, instead of 163, as had been reported. This is greatly in Feig's favor in his contest, for it is well known that in the eastern portion of Kittson county a great many residents of unorganized townships went to polling places in organized townships and voted, contrary to law. No objection to this illegal proceeding was made by the judges of election. They allowed the non-residents to vote without hindrance and placed their names on the register, with their place of residence. On this account the irregularity can easily be proven by the poll books, and in the opinion of those familiar with the case, Feig should have no difficulty in having these votes thrown out. If this is done there is no doubt that Feig, instead of Boen, will have the plurality, for these voters from the unorganized towns were all Boen men, and there were enough of them to more than turn the scale. According to the returns Feig had 12,529 votes and Boen 12,614, giving the latter a plurality of 85. The figures are absolutely correct, for they were footed up by experts and gone over again and again to make sure that there were no errors.

Marshall County Leader:—At the meeting, called last Friday evening to discuss the drainage problem, Richard Russell was elected chairman and J. P. Lundin, secretary. After considerable discussion a committee of three, consisting of George R. Roberts, H. Smith, and J. P. Lundin, were appointed and authorized to appoint other committees and do what they saw fit in regard to the matter. A resolution was also passed requesting the other towns in this senatorial district to organize and appoint committees to hold a general meeting at some future time to discuss the question with Senator Wood and Representative Wagner.

This question is the most important one for this district that will come before the next session of the legislature and to accomplish anything there must be an organization. If the swamp lands of the Red River Valley were drained it would add thousands of acres of the best producing wheat lands to the wheat lands to the wheat producing area of this Valley. This must be done at some future time and if it is done now it places no additional burden on the taxpayers, as these appropriations come from the sale of swamp lands, but if we wait until this fund is all used up it will either have to be done by private subscription or by direct taxation. For one we want to see this work done at once and shall do our best to agitate the question and have an appropriation made, and if all would do the same it would be but a short time before the "swamps" would be producing good crops of wheat. All that is necessary is to work in concert and the thing can be accomplished with but little work, comparatively speaking, whereas if each one works as individuals it will be a long tedious job and then we may not be succesful. Again we say organize and act together.

The Day of Good Will.

The legend of the Christian Church is that its founder was born on the 25th day of December. Whether it is anything more than a legend, as to the exact date, is very doubtful. For a great many years before the Christian era, the Romans had held a festival about the same time of year, the special features of which were feasting and exchange of gifts. In making converts from heathenism the church deemed it wisdom to leave the people a festival at the accustomed date, and associate it with the new religion, by calling it the birthday of Christ, The most important fact connected with this day is that it marked an era of "peace on earth and good will to men." Such ought to be the significance of our festivities and our gifts. On such a day it is a good thing to visit our friends and give them our affectionate greetings and good wishes. You can hardly visit friends anywhere in the West without finding that some part of your journey (if you wish it to be speedy and pleasant) will be over the Burlington route. See that your home agent gives you tickets via this line. For any particulars, address W. J. C. Kenyon; Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The Columbia Daily Calendar

remains the only valuable daily pad calendar. The calendar for '93 is of the same general design as that of previous years, consisting of 366 leaves, one for every day in the year, and a calendar for the entire year. The day of the week, of the month, and of the year are given, and on each leaf is a short sermon on the "Gospel of Out-doors, Health, and Happiness," with valuable hints on practical road making. The leaves are so arranged that there will be no stub left, and each one can be referred to at any time during the year. The pad is upon a metallic stand of ivory black, arranged so as to rest upon the desk at a convenient angle. The pad matter, which in the aggregate is enough to make a book, is all fresh and new, and is of more pertinent value than that of any previous calendar. The calendar is issued by the Pope Mfg. Co., of Boston, New York, and Chicago.

The Review of Reviews for December sustains with remarkable enterprise and ability the great reputation this magazine has won for timeliness, exact pertinency and wide range of interest. Among its almost countless illustrations are groups including some thirty of the newly-elected governs of states. No other magazine could possibly have secured and made such illustrations and actually embodied them in its December number, for in many instances it was not definitely known until the middle of November who were actually elected as governors. The editor's review of the election and his discussion of the results will attract wide attention. The editorial department entitled "The Progress of the World" is unusually extended this month.

The December Wide Awake is a true Christmas number. It has the full Christmas flavor, from the brilliantly colored frontispiece that opens it to the fantastic flower piece that ends it. On the opening reading page a smoking plum-pudding, holly-decorated, sends its grateful stream in a mass of tint over the whole page, and serves as the initial to Margaret Sidney's quaint ode "To the One, Whoever He Be," who discouvered the toothsome plum-pudding—"The Bluecoat School," by Louise Imogen Guiney, is highly interesting and fully illustrated by Joseph Pennel; Mr. Stoddard's capital Christmas story, "Mr. Van Gelt's Case," is full of the best Christmas spirit. Mrs. Sandham's practical paper for Christmas celebration is entitled "The Vagaries of St. Claus;" a Christmas ballad by R. Macdonald Alden, "How Lajla Found the Christ-child," is beautifully illustrated by Merrill. "How Jonathan was Good," by Elizabeth Cumings, tells us over the old, old story of a boy who did so want to be good, but—. Estelle M. Hurll's description of "A Child's Christmas in France" is full of interest. A fantastic floral piece by the artist of flowers, de Longpre, closes this delightful number, which is full of other good things that we have no space to mention here.

Price 20 cents a number, $2,40 a year. On sale at newsstands or sent postpaid on receipt of price, by D. Lothrop, Company, Publishers, Boston.

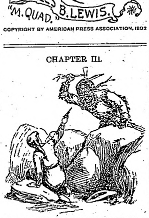
CHAPTER III.



He was swinging his tomahawk for a blow at her.

The carefully prepared trap of the Indians had failed. It was only when the white man had turned sharply aside, bunched the wagons, placed the spare horses as safely as possible and began rolling the bowlders together for a breastworks that the red man realized that he had been sold out.

Then they swarmed out of the ravines—the warriors of Iron Heart, of Red Eagle, of Black Crow—three hundred strong, and mounting their wiry ponies, which had lain as close as rabbits, they swarmed out and over the plains and gave vent to their disgust and indignation.

Had they charged en masse the little band of white men must have been swept away by the momentum, but they delayed and every moment saw the breastworks strengthened by another bowlder. The Indian must feint and dodge before he strikes. In that characteristic he is below the serpent. He must consult and powwow before he advances. This is to brace him up.

More than half an hour was consumed in demonstrations of bluff before the Indians were ready to act. Then it was to advance his natural weapon first—treachery. A white man—some renegade and criminal who feared even the mixed society of the west and had gone over to the enemies of his race body and soul—advanced with a white flag tied to a stick as a flag of truce. He advanced boldly and impudently, but when within pistol shot of the breastworks was halted by the captain and asked what he wanted.

"See hyar, I feel sorry fur you folks," he said in reply. "And I hev cum to help ye out of a bad scrape. Thar's reds 'nuff yere to chaw ye up in five minits, and twice as many more will be yere at sundown. They know whar ye ar bound fur, and they ar determined to stop ye."

"Well, what else?" asked the captain as the renegade paused.

"They wanted to wipe ye out to the last man, but I've prevailed upon 'em to spare ye in case ye'll turn back. That's what I've come to tell ye."

"If we turn back we won't be harmed?"

"Not a hair of yer heads. Jist take the back track and that'll end the matter at once."

"And suppose we don't?"

"Then God help ye! Ye'll be chawed to pieces in ten minits!"

"You go back and tell your friends to begin chawing as soon as they please!" shouted the captain, and every man in the inclosure cheered the words.

There was more delay as the renegade went back to report, and every man worked to build the breastworks higher and strengthen it. Wagons and horses occupied a solid square of less than half an acre. It was the highest ground within cannon shot. This was as good as another foot on the height of the breastworks. Twenty-five men distributed around that inclosure would make a terribly thin line, but twenty-five Winchester rifles would maintain a terribly destructive fire.

But treachery had not yet exhausted itself. Your noble red man of Cooper eulogy depends upon that even when attacking women and children. Back came the renegade to say:

"Ye better take the chance I hold out to ye. The Indians hev got mad, and nothin but yer promise and the quick performance of it will save yer scalps. If a gun is fired I can't hold 'em a minit."

"If we turn back we will not be molested?" queried the captain.

"Not a red shall cum nigh ye."

"But we have only your word for it."

"Which orter be good 'nuff. I am workin to save ye scalps."

"And you think the way to do it is to turn us all over to them! Get back, you lying renegade—get out of range or we'll drop you!"

The renegade beat a hasty retreat, and a few minutes later the Indians dismounted, crept about the plateau to form a circle, and opened fire on the breastworks from three hundred rifles. They had waited too long for a rush, but the little band was encircled.

Water! Not a drop!

Forage! Not an ounce!

Provisions! Yes, but they must be eaten in a raw state.

The Indians had but to preserve their circle of fire about the fort and nature would do the rest. Men may escape the bullet, but thirst kills.

And what of Joe and Bess? As soon as the Indians appeared on the flanks of the train he had hidden her out of sight, and he had hopes up to the opening of the battle that she had not been seen. When he knew that danger was imminent he did not conceal the fact from her. She grew a shade paler, but she shut her teeth hard and threw off the womanish feeling which would have weakened her.

"We are to be attacked?" she queried as the wagons were packed and the men began at the breastworks.

"It looks that way," replied Joe, "but it may be only bluster. You had best keep out of sight."

"But every one of us will be wanted to handle a firearm. I can shoot with either rifle or revolver. See? I have a revolver. If there is danger I must take share with the rest."

A moment later her father came up. He looked very anxious as he said:

"My daughter, I fear that our situation could not be worse. We have ten to one in front of us and we shall presently be attacked. You had better lie down on the bottom of the wagon."

"I should soon be helpless from fear," she replied. "Let me remain here behind the rocks. If they charge us I can help repel them."

When the firing opened she was kneeling between Joe and her father. Not a return shot was fired from the inclosure. Now and then a bullet found its way in between the loosely piled rocks, but the men had only to hug the ground to be safe. As the Indians had to elevate their guns at an angle of forty-five degrees to fire, most of the bullets passed over, cutting the tops of the wagons, but leaving the animals unharmed.

It was well for the band that an old soldier had command. He took in the lay of the ground, made up his mind where the blow would fall and notified every man to be ready for the signal. The redskins would soon tire of wasting their ammunition, and then the more enthusiastic among them would demand a charge.

An Indian is patient only when over powered. He is brave enough to face death only after he has worked himself up to fury. The one sided battle—the yells, shots, screams and change of positions—had their due effect. Half an hour before sundown the young warriors were clamorous to be led to the charge. The white men had shown their cowardice by withholding their fire. It was a sign, too, that they were short of cartridges. A rush from a hundred warriors would carry the camp and give up its plunder.

The renegade white man, whoever he was, had some military ideas in his head. He was seen hurrying from one point to another to consult, and he selected the point to be advanced against. Owing to the scarcity of material, the north side of the inclosure was not as high as the rest. The approach to this side was not as steep. One of the dry gullies ran parallel to this side, and the charging warriors would have only three hundred feet of open ground to cross.

When the red sun was hardly more than a hand breadth above the plains the firing suddenly ceased. The captain had been expecting it. He knew where the charge was to come from. There would be a feint on the south side to distract attention, but he left only three men to resist it. All others were scattered along the north side, arranging for a cross fire when possible, and they were not stationed a moment too soon. At the sound of a shrill warwhoop uttered by Iron Heart, who was the ranking chief, a fusillade was opened against the south side, and a hundred or more warriors, the pick of all the force, sprang out of the gully and dashed at the north side. They expected to find it unprepared.

Crack! Crack! Crack! One of the very first tufted heads showing above the bank received a bullet. Twenty-one Winchesters flamed and roared as fast as men could throw out the shells and pull trigger.

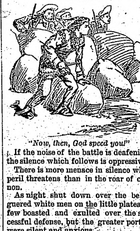
A besom of death and destruction was let loose. A wall of flame swept forward to scorch and shrivel.

The charge of a hundred men is a battering ram—a landslide—a great wave. It cannot be staid at once. Its own momentum carries it forward to a certain point. The charge was a failure from the outset, but the wave did not flow back until a brawny redskin reached the breastworks right in front of Bess. It was only hip high to him, and he was swinging his tomahawk for a blow at her when a bullet from her revolver, held aloft, entered his throat and threw him backward to die after a brief struggle.

It was all over in five minutes. It had been a desperate charge at the weakest point and twenty-three warriors lay dead on the slope, while a dozen more, more or less seriously wounded, crawled away to secure shelter.

Then the great red sun touched the plains with his golden rim, sank silently into the sterile ground, and twilight came to make shadows race about among the dead—dead but hideous—corpses in the war paint as they lay with legs drawn up and eyes staring into the darkening heavens.

CHAPTER IV.



"Now, then, God speed you!"

If the noise of the battle is deafening, the silence which follows is oppressive.

There is more menace in silence when peril threatens than in the roar of cannon.

As night shut down over the beleaguered white men on the little plateau a few boasted and exulted over the successful defense, but the greater portion were silent and anxious.

The red man is a wild beast of higher type than the tiger, but he has all the instincts and characteristics of the dreaded animal. The tiger sleeps by day and roams abroad when darkness comes. The Indian does the same when left to his own will if circumstances do not prevent. His vision at night is animal-like and his scent is keener when the sun goes down.

The captain passed around the fortification as soon as the firing died away to see what loss had been sustained. One man and two horses had been slightly wounded. He gave orders that one-half of them should prepare themselves such a meal as it was possible to get without a fire, and then go back to the breastworks and relieve the other half. There was no danger of an immediate attack. The Indians had received a setback which would dampen their ardor for several hours to come.

Bess had retreated to the wagons, and the men were enthusiastic in praise of her courage. Three or four of them had witnessed her exhibition of nerve, and every one was determined to shake hands and bestow a few words of commendation. While they were so engaged Joe slipped quietly over the breastworks and lifted the warrior she had shot into the inclosure. He was an athletic young fellow, wearing the feathers of a subchief, and the look of fury and hate had not yet faded from his face. When he brought the feathers to Bess he said:

"There's none among us ever made a better shot. He was a leader among them."

"But I'm so sorry I had to do it," she pleaded. "Oh, if they'd only leave us alone or be at peace! Think of my taking human life!"

"And I'm afraid the worst is not over," whispered Joe. "I know the devils. They'll never leave us until they have our scalps. You may have to shoot others."

The girl burst into tears at the thought, but quickly brushing them away she said:

"Their blood be upon their own heads. My mother used a rifle against the rebellious Sepoys when attacked, and I should be ashamed if I did not help in my own defense here."

When all had broken their fast the captain whispered to Joe and two others whom he knew to be experienced in Indian warfare, and as they crouched down under the shelter of the breastworks he said:

"I've got my idea about this thing, but I want to counsel with you. First and foremost, there's anywhere from two hundred to two hundred and fifty redskins around us."

"Fully three hundred," replied Joe.

"They attempted to ride over us, but were soundly thrashed," continued the captain. "If there were only one hundred they'd pull up stakes and tackle us farther on, but this big crowd won't think of such a move. We've got the whiprow on 'em in one sense, but before tomorrow night every tongue will be parched with thirst. If they hold us here three days we'll be drinking the blood of the horses. In a week we'll be madmen. Now, then, who has anything to say?"

Not a voice answered for a long minute, and then it was Joe who replied:

"There's only one string to hang a hope on. If we can get help to beat 'em off we are saved for the time. If we can't we must go under."

"Why not mount the horse and make a dash for it, leaving the outfit in their hands?" queried one of the men.

"How many would live to get twenty miles away, do you think? Not one! The Indians would ride over us in no time. I tell you, boys, we have got into a bad row, and I must confess that I can't see any way out of it. But what's your string, Joe?"

"The day we left Brule City I saw a man who had come down from Fort Sully," replied the young man. "He said that troops had been ordered forward to protect emigrants and that a number of gold seekers, hunters and trappers would start with the soldiers. If that body of men followed the Big Cheyenne, which of course they would do up to the forks, and if they started two days behind us as they were to, where should they be now?"

"Being mounted as we are, and having three or four wagons at least, they'd make about our distance. The forks are not over twenty miles away, and they may be there tonight or not get up for another day yet. But how are we to get help from them?"

"Let them know of our peril."

"Can any of us fly?"

"No, but we can walk and run and ride. One of us must be out of here within an hour on the way to the forks. He must find the men from Sully and bring 'em down on the rear of this tribe of redskins."

"A rabbit couldn't make his way through the circle the demons have formed about us," replied the captain in tones of dejection.

"But a man of my size can and will!" exclaimed Joe. "I know the risks, but the game is worth it. If I lose my scalp it will only be two or three days in advance of the rest of you. If I get through I shall save you all."

The right hand of every man went out to him in the darkness, but it was two long minutes before the captain said:

"I wouldn't ask it of you, Joe, but if you will volunteer we'll pray to God to spare your life. Your success is the only thing that will save us. What is your plan?"

"I can speak a few words of the dialect of almost any tribe in the west," replied Joe, "and I shall strip that dead body for a disguise. I can't hope to get out unperceived, but I hope to be taken for an Indian long enough to get through the lines."

The knowledge of what Joe proposed to do was kept from the majority of the men. The body of the dead warrior was dragged among the wagons, stripped of its buckskin suit, and in the course of half an hour the young hunter was ready to take his leave. He had transformed himself into an Indian, so far as outward appearances went, and the men were more hopeful of his plan. The captain and a couple of the men accompanied him to the north side of the inclosure, and after a cautious survey of the grounds outside Joe whispered:

"It is as I hoped for; more than half the bodies have already been removed. The redskins must be made to think I am one of the party engaged in the work. I am all ready. Any special word, captain?"

"No. If you find the party they will help us out of our fix. If they do not catch us napping or rush us too often we can hold out here for a week, but every one will have to drink blood after tomorrow. If you do not return we'll know that you could not find the party. Now, then, God speed you!"

Joe softly mounted the breastworks, tomahawk in hand, dropped to the earth outside and a minute later was lost sight of in the darkness. The three men left behind listened with bated breath.

Joe must enter the gully filled with Indians. If his disguise was penetrated and he was made prisoner the fact would be announced by whoops of rejoicing.

The silence would have been that of the grave but for the chirp of the crickets. The men could hear each other's heart beat as they leaned against each other and listened for an alarm.

One—two—three—four—five minutes dragged away.

It is when a man's life is at stake that the minutes pass like lightning flashes or drag like eternities.

Six—seven—eight—nine—ten!

Joe must have reached the gully ere this. If not suspected at the first go off he would not be suspected at all.

Five minutes more passed away, and the captain drew a long breath of relief and whispered:

"He will get through. Let us thank God!"

The night was starlight, but a sort of fog hung in the air, and if the Indians made a night attack they could not be seen until close up to the breastworks. The captain no sooner felt that Joe was well launched on his perilous errand than he returned to the men and issued his orders fo the night.

The Indians had suffered such a severe loss that they might not attempt to carry the fort by storm again, even under shelter of the darkness, but no precautions must be neglected. That their loss had discouraged them and resulted in retreat was not to be hoped for. It would render them more determined to have the scalp of every man in the train.

An Indian who learns caution from being repulsed becomes more dangerous than before. Instead of the tiger's rush it becomes the advance of the serpent.

Ferocity is temporarily replaced by cunning and strategy, and he may be feared at a dozen points instead of one.

"Watch! Listen! Be alert!" were the captain's orders. "Not one Indian must reach the breastworks if we would let tomorrow's sun find our scalps on our heads!"

And by and by the camp grew quiet and the night began to drag its slow length away

Royal Persons Who Own American Land.

According to the information and belief of a wide awake member of the Real Estate exchange, nearly all of the foreign potentates are investors in New York real estate. He declares that the purchase of a valuable piece of property in Nassau street, made about a year ago by a foregn banking house, was an investment of Queen Victoria's. "The queen owns other real estate in this city," said the well posted man, "and she has bought thousands of acres of land out west. The royal family of Germany has extensive investments in this city and elsewhere, and so has the king of Sweden. The ex-Empress Isabella of Spain owns several pieces of property in this city and in other parts of the United States. She is a woman of great foresight. The land on which the Western Union building stands was once the property of the Empress Eugenie, and I presume that she still has some investments here.

"King Humbert of Italy is reputed to be a judicious buyer of property in this country, and persons suspected of being agents of the czar of Russia have been looking about on this side of the water for first class investments. I tell you those people who are in the king business in Europe are shrewd. They cannot tell how soon they may be shaken off their thrones by political revolutions, and they mean to have something to fall back on in this land of the free. How much better off Dom Pedro would have been if he had invested a few millions of Brazilian money here several years ago."—New York Times.

Communicating with Paris.

The methods employed by the Parisian authorities for communicating with the provinces during the siege of Paris were persevering and ingenious. The principal means of sending letters was by balloons and carrier pigeons, but many other plans were tried. It was almost impossible for a messenger to get through the German lines. Even when other difficulties could be overcome the danger of a search and a discovery of the dispatch was great.

Many of the messengers made incisions in the skin and hid a dispatch under the epidermis. Others provided themselves with hollow ten centime pieces or hollow keys, which could be opened like a box and in which dispatches could be hidden. One was accustomed to hide his dispatch under an artificial hollow tooth. These dispatches of course were written in cipher, and covered only a fragment of paper.

Attempts were made to cross the enemy's lines by following the caves and natural tunnels under the left branch of the Seine, and by diving and crossing the bed of the river in diving suits, but these plans failed.

A curious scheme was the putting of letters into little hollow spheres of zinc, and throwing these spheres into the Seine or its tributaries, hoping that they would float to Paris. They did float to Paris, but not until after the armistice. It was supposed that they were stopped by dams, or that they were discovered and held back by the Germans until the siege was at an end.—Youth's Companion.

SOME STATISTICS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE INTERSTATE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Interesting Figures Given in Regard to Business and Other Matters—Number of Casualties Greater Than in Any Previous Year.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The fourth statistical report of the interstate commerce commission prepared by its statistican, Mr. Caesar, which has just been submitted, gives a complete epitome of railroad progress in the United States for the period covered, railway mileage in the United States on June 30, 1891, (not counting double tracks) was 168,492.74 miles. Connecticut had to every 100 square miles of territory over 20 miles of track, Delaware 26 miles, Illinois 18 miles, Iowa 15 miles, Massachusetts 25 miles, New Jersey 27 miles, New York 16 miles, Ohio 19 miles, Pennsylvania 22 miles. The only countries in Europe which have an excess of ten miles per 100 square miles of territory are Germany with 12 miles, Great Britain with 16 miles, France with 11 miles, Belgium with 28 miles, Holland with 13 miles and Switzerland with 12 miles. No country in Europe, Sweden alone excepted, has ten miles of line per 10,000 inhabitants, while in this country but two states have less than ten miles of railway per 10.000 inhabitants. The increase in railway mileage during the year was 4,850 miles. This is less than the average for several years past. The greatest activity in railway building seems to have been in the states lying south of the Ohio and east of the Misissippi. There are 1,785 railroad corporations, of which 889 were independent companies for the purpose of operation and 787 were subsidiary companies the remainder being private lines. The total number of locomotives used by the railways was 32,139, showing an increase of 1,999 during the year and the total number of cars the property of railroads was 1,215,611, showing an increase of 45,944 during the year. The number of men employed during the year covered by the report was 784,225, being an increase of 34,984. The total capitalization of the railways of the United States was $9,828,475,015 or $60,942 per mile of line. This shows an increase in outstanding capital of $602 per mile of line as compared with the previous year's report.

The gross earnings from operation during the year were $1,096,761,395 or $6,801 per mile of line. Operating expenses were $731,887,893 or $45,538 per mile of line, leaving a net income from operation of $364,873,502 or $2,263 per mile of line. The number of passengers carried during the year was 531,183,988. The number of tons of freight carried was 675,608,323.

The report shows that casualties during the year were greater than in any previous year covered by reports to the commission. The number killed during the year was 7,019 and the number injured was 33,881. Of these the number of employes killed was 2,660 and the number injured was 26,140. The number of passengers killed was 4,369 and the number injured 7,741. This report emphasizes more strongly than previous reports the necessity of legislation compelling railways to adopt train brakes and automatic couplers, and also suggest that some steps be taken besides the adoption of the train brake to prevent the frequency of casualties from trains and engines. The large number killed and injured from collisions also brings prominently into notice the necessity of some extensive use of the block system in the handling of trains and a more perfect application of the principle of personal responsibility in the case of accidents. An investigation into the matter of handling trains is recommended.

Printers on Strike.

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 12.—During the morning every printer on the Kansas City Mail, including the foreman, struck and walked out of the office. The trouble arose from the employment of non-union printers on some extra work. The proprietor of The Mail says he will no longer recognize union labor and that he will publish in the future with non-union printers.

Passenger Train Ditched.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 12.—No. 7, a west bound passenger train on the Union Pacific, was ditched near Hallville station by a broken rail. Several passenger cars are piled up. Two people have broken arms and one a broken leg. It is impossible to get accurate details.

Wants to Fight Goddard.

WICHITA, Kas., Dec. 12.—Ed Smith, the Pittsburg, pugilist, has telegraphed a challenge to Joe Goddard for a finish fight before the Wichita Athletic club for a reasonable amount. Five hundred dollars have been posted by Smith's friends as a forfeit.

Brought Home the Body.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—The steamship Kaiser William II, has arrived having on board the body of Augustus L. Traegar, who died at sea on the voyage out Nov. 12. Traegar, who belonged to New Haven, had gained a wide reputation as a marksman. He was the amateur champion.

Miss Anthony Gets a Job.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 12.—Miss Susan B. Anthony, of Rochester, the well-known woman's suffrage advocate, has been appointed manager of the state industrial school by Governor Flower.

Adjourned Until Jan. 4.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 12.—Judge Murphy has adjourned the Curtis murder case until Jan. 4. An effort was made to have Curtis's bail reduced, but the judge refused.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Wednesday, Dec. 7.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Senator Vest precipitated an Indian debate in the senate by calling up his joint resolution for the appointment of a commission to negotiate with the 6,000 Indians of the five civilized tribes for the surrender to the United States of the 45,000,000 acres of lands occupied by them, as homes for settlers, retaining enough for themselves and their families. Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, who has been looking into this question during the summer as one of a sub-committee asked that the resolution lay over and promised to continue the debate at an early day. The senate adjourned upon announcement of the death of Representative McDonald.

Thursday, Dec. 8.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—The senate went into execution session immediately after the transaction of routine business. In executive session the Chilian treaty providing for a commission to adjust the claims of Americans against Chili was ratified. A large number of executive nominations were also confirmed. The senate then adjourned till Monday.

The house held a short session. The printing bill was the only one considered, and the house adjourned pending its discussion.

Friday, Dec. 9

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Mr. Catchings, from the committee on rules, reported a resolution amending the rules so as to provide that business coming over as unfinished from one session of congress may be considered immediately at the meeting of a subsequent session of the same congress. Adopted. Committee appointments were announced. The consideration of the senate bill, with house amendments, relative to the public printing and binding was then resumed and after some discussion was passed. Adjourned till Monday.

Senate not in session.

Saturday, Dec. 10

Neither house in session.

Monday, Dec. 12.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—The anti-option bill and Mr. Vest's joint resolution regarding the disposal of the lands of the five civilized tribes of Indians took up most of the time in the senate. The anti-option bill was ordered printed to show house amendments. No final action was taken on either measure.

This was District of Columbia day in the house and no business of public importance was transacted.

A SHIP CANAL.

Believed Congress Will Authorize One From the Great Lakes to the Hudson.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Representatives Lind of Minnesota and Chipman of Michigan have joined hands on a move, which, if accomplished, will be of great interest to the Northwest. In the last house Mr. Bently, of New York, introduced a bill appropriating $100,000 for a complete survey and examination of the best route to connect the Great Lakes with the Hudson river, either by a direct route from Lake Erie or a canal around Niagara and a canal from Oswego. The agitation which Secretary Thompson, of the Duluth chamber of commerce, is making has had the effect already of stirring up congressmen who live in states to be benefitted, and they are heartily in favor of a meeting of deey waterway men in this city, as has been proposed. It is believed that such a meeting will bring men enough here to influence congress in passing the bill. Mr. Chipman is confident of getting the bill through.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

G. M. Lambertson Gets Nettleton's Place Other Appointments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The president has sent the following nominations to the senate:

Genio M. Lambertson, of Nebraska, to be assistant secretary of the treasury, vice General A. B. Nettleton, resigned.

Charles C. Cole, of the District of Columbia, to be associate supreme judge of the District of Columbia, vice Charles P. James, retired.

Peter S. Grosscup, of Illinois, to be United States district judge for the Northern district of Illinois, vice Henry Blodgett, retired.

S. W. McDill, of Iowa, to be interstate commerce commissioner, reappointment.

Pierson C. Cheney, of New Hampshire, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Switzerland.

Got a Light Sentence.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Dec. 12.—Geore L. Bagley, the messenger who stole $100,000 from the United States Express company Nov. 18, was sentenced to two and one-half years in the penitentiary. Bagley pleaded guilty. Judge Walterman gave as his reason for imposing a light sentence the prisoner's previous good character and his prompt action in restoring the stolen money.

Mrs. Mary E. O'Fallon of Piqua, O., says the Physicians are Astonished, and look at her like one

Raised from the Dead

Long and Terrible Illness from Blood Poisoning

Completely Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mrs. Mary E. O'Fallon, a very intelligent lady of Piqua, Ohio, was poisoned while assisting physicians at an autopsy 5 years ago, and soon terrible ulcers broke out on her head, arms, tongue and throat. Her hair all came out. She weighed but 78 lbs., and saw no prospect of help. At last she began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and at once improved; could soon get out of bed and walk. She says: "I became perfectly cured by and am now a well woman. I weigh 128 lbs., eat well and do the work for a large family. My case seems a wonderful recovery and physicians look at me in astonishment, as almost like one raised from the dead."

HOOD'S PILLS should be in every family medicine chest. Once used, always preferred.

If you want to purchase a half section of land, all under cultivation, at a great bargain call and see us. We know of such a place within two miles of the city limits that can be had cheap, as the owner wishes to put the proceeds into other business. One hundred acres of the land was broken last year. Good buildings, good well and good fences on the place. One of the best farms for a stock farm we know of in this vicinity. It is a bargain, [30 tf]

ORDER FOR HEARING.

[First publication Dec. 1st. 1892.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 24th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Andrew Wardberg, deceased.

On receiving and filing the petition of Ed Wardberg, of the town of King, of the county of Polk, representing, among other things, that Andrew Wardberg, late of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1892, at the county of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Erick O. Knutson, granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said court, on Wednesday, the 28th day of December, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston, the 24th day of November, 1892.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Dec. 1st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars ($300.00) which became due January 1st, 1892, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Robert J. Montague, mortgagee, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1891, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1891, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book 49 of mortgages, on page 417, and the said Robert J. Montague having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and there is now justly due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of one thousand thirty-seven dollars ($1,037), and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section thirty-one (31), in township one hundred and fifty (150), of Range forty-six (46), excepting therefrom the west three hundred feet which is platted into lots, and the railroad right of way of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company; also excepting that portion lying on the northeast side of said railroad and within five hundred feet of the centre line of Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to Crookston, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 14th day of January, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st, A. D. 1892.

Max Ericsson went to St. Paul on Monday night.

Judge Powers made many friends during his stay in the city last week.

The Great Northern train was several hours late on Monday evening.

Miss Dollie Bunnell returned last week from a pleasant visit with friends in St. Paul and elsewhere.

W. C. Andrew, Wright, Barrett & Stilwell's genial traveler, made this office a visit of business and pleasure last week.

Comrade Carr, of Fosston, participated in the festivities of the evening with the boys of Col. Cobham Post last Friday.

Comrade English, of Fertile, enjoyed the hilarities of the occasion at the post rooms on Friday evening of last week.

Comrade Carr was one of the happy ones who put up the needful on subscription last week. While many are doing this there are a few whom we imagine might but some way neglect us.

Louis J. Columbus has associated with him in the management of the opera house for the coming year Walter Bivins, who will take a whirl at the business. The Journal wishes the new firm abundant success.

O. C. Bergland is a firm believer in sheep, which, he says pays better than any property a farmer can keep. He believes in commencing right and sent to Wisconsin for a Cotswold ram which arrived on Wednesday.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson was in the city last week enroute for Grand Forks, where, (one of the papers there says) he sold a carload or so of fine hogs. The captain is not discouraged at the political outlook and says the G. O. P., will be on deck again with both feet by next presidential election.

The Journal's item on "trap-doors left open in sidewalks" was prolific of good, several of the parties referred to assuring us that as far as they were concerned it should not occur again. This is good (so far as it goes) but there are yet several parties to hear from. The traveling public has the right-of-way on the sidewalks and no one has a right to obstruct them for several hours at a time.

The coal barons thought to do a big thing this fall by raising the price of coal one dollar a ton. There was no other reason why this should be done only that the people must have the coal and so they thought to extract their pound of flesh from the necessities of the poor—but fortunately, so far, nature has been on the side of the poor man—very warm weather and not so much coal needed. That this may continue through the winter is the wish of the Journal.

Sheriff Grundysen went down to Fergus Falls on Thursday night of last week after James Fisk and John Elder, Polk county prisoners confined in the Fergus Falls jail for safe keeping. He arrived there about one o'clock and left for home with his prisoners at 3 o'clock a. m., having the prisoners shackled together as is always customary. Just before reaching Barnesville, the sheriff, who not only had been without sleep that night but had also been doing night work a good deal of late, and deprived of sleep fell into a doze and did not awaken until the train was near Glyndon, when he found that his prisoners were not on board. When the train arrived at Glyndon he secured a rig and went back to Barnesville but did not succeed in finding his men who had alighted from the train at that place and decamped.

John J. Ellingson was up from Neillsville on Tuesday and dropped in to chat with the Journal while he produced the wherewithal to liquidate for two years. Talking of farming, Mr. Ellingson says he has gotten over the belief that a man can make big money simply raising wheat. His idea is that diversified husbandry will pay a good profit but diversified husbandry calls for the exercise of more brains than wheat raising. Diversified husbandry also supplies what wheat raisers lack—employment all the year round. "Why," said Mr. E. "a business man would not think he could get along at all if he only worked one-half of his time. He thinks he must put in a large share of his time all the year around in order to be successful and I don't see why the same rule should not apply to a farmer. With stock he can put in his time to good advantage and no one need tell me that stock will not pay in this country if intelligently managed."

G. H. Palmer has secured the agency for the railroad swamp lands of the state—some 47,000 acres—and is going to push the sale of these lands for all there is in it.

Wm. Cronin, who was with Fred Sargeant for awhile is now with Montague & Hoch.

M. R. Brown predicts that the horse trade next spring will be duller than for several years.

Now is the time to subscribe for the Journal and secure our new serial story. It is a good one.

August Wentzel talks of going to Southern California to live if he can dispose of his Crookston property.

Talking about window decorations—you should see Chabot's windows! They are veritable bowers of beauty.

Rev. O. H. Elmer attended the old settlers association meeting at Moorhead last week. He was elected one of the vice-presidents.

L. O. Tomerdahl sidled up to our reporter whom he met in the street Monday evening and handing him $1.50 said: "Put it ahead one more year." Good boy.

While in the city attending court call at the opera house some evening and see the Northern Lights Company. It is well worth your time and the admission price.

Chris. Anderson says that his trip south cost him over $2000 all because somebody got scared. Said that he had made arrangements at the bank for payment of all maturing bills out of the proceeds of his threshing bills as fast as they were paid in and is puzzled to know how the panic was caused.

Swan Anderson is in from Black River doing service as a juror this term. Says crops were very light this year in that section so far as wheat is concerned but oats and barley were very good. Swan is a consistent alliance man but does not seem to be very high up on the people's party racket.

Will Hoch and Fred Moeckel have formed a partnership in the restaurant business and are fitting up the place just opposite the depot, recently occupied by Hoch Bros. They expect to be ready for business this week when they will be pleased to see all of their friends who need a good square meal.

W. H. Jennings, writing from Tacoma to renew his subscription to the Journal assures us of continued good health and prosperity and says that at the last meeting of the G. A. R. Post, in Tacoma, he was elected commander for the ensuing year. The Journal is pleased to learn of the prosperity of friend Jennings.

Fred Fox: "Your answer to the McIntosh News last week just expresses my views in relation to the people's party exactly. I have looked in vain for any help from that source and I believe you are exactly right in your position. Every farmer in Polk County should stand by the Journal for it has always proven to be their true friend—always advocating the course that is for their best interests."

The Northern Lights Company commenced a week's engagement at the Grand on Monday night, opening in "Inside Track," a light comedy with enough of the serious side of life to make it balance well. The company was greeted by a full house and the management felt encouraged at the outlook. The company is a good ordinary one and the entertainments they give well worth the price of admission. Every night this week with Saturday afternoon matinee. Secure reserved seats at Tom Morris' jewelry store.

An oyster supper and auction sale of fancy articles will be held in the Business College Hall, Tuesday Dec. 20th at 8 p. m. After the rendering of a short program, the young ladies society of the Immanuel church of Crookston will offer for sale a choice selection of fancy articles made by the members of the society for the benefit of the church. Here is your chance to buy Xmas presents for your friends. Oyster supper in connection with the auction.

F. E. Holmes, of Minneapolis, made the Journal a pleasant call on Thursday last. Mr. Holmes is assistant general manager in the Dakota Milling Association and after Jan. 1st next will have his office in Grand Forks. Speaking of the delivery of wheat, Mr. H. said that while he was confident that there is not as much this year as usual he wss surprised at the way it is coming into market, there being twice as much delivered as he should there would be.

Col. Cobham Post No. 90 gave a pleasant social at their post rooms on Friday evening of last week where cards, social chat and a free lunch were indulged in until 12 o'clock. And moreover some of the boys—those who smoke—enjoyed a box of fine cigars between meals and between stories. Among the guests present was Judge Powers, who is a veteran and knows well how to enjoy a good time. These entertainments will be a feature during the long winter months on each Friday evening when the post is not in session. A large number were out last Friday and seemed to enjoy it hugely.

M. Iverson was in from Fosston Tuesday.

R. J. Montague went over to Grand Forks on Tuesday morning.

"Northern Lights" is a misnomer—it should be "Northern Heavys."

Gunder Bjorgo, the McIntosh merchant, was doing business in the city this week.

J. W. Peterson is contemplating an offer to travel for the California wine house of St. Paul, after January 1st.

F. T. Hazeltine, who had his ankle sprained a couple of weeks ago, is now able to be round again.

Henry Burkhardt was able to get down stairs on Tuesday for the first time since he was taken sick. The Senator hopes he will be able to start for home with him to-morrow evening.

Attorney C. A. Nye, of Moorhead, was in the city on Wednesday defending in the case of the State vs. Johnson, who stands indicted for stealing twine from a car in East Grand Forks in July.

E. T. Spafford a prosperous lumber dealer, of Thompson, N. D. and F. B. Chapman of Grand Forks, who has been engaged in the stock business, were in the city Monday and made a trip to St. Hilaire.

Dr. Warninger was summoned to Ada on Sunday and went down in the evening to attend to some sick horses there. That the business must have been very important was shown by the fact that he had not returned on Tuesday afternoon.

R. C. Holaday, a gentleman from Ohio, now has charge of the business college, Prof. Strawbridge being occupied in court—getting familiar with the work preparatory to assuming the duties of his position as official stenographer to Judge Ives.

H. B. Budd, of Edna, gave the Journal occasion on Monday to rejoice in another paid up subscription for a year. Budd is one of those progressive men who never lets a subscription lapse a month but always keeps paid up in advance. It is a pleasure to deal with such men.

C. F. Mix has accepted the position of agent for the Great Northern road at Barnesville and gone to enter upon his new duties. Mr Mix has been in the employ of the road at this point for many years and we can confidently recommend him to the good graces of the good people of Barnesville who will find in him an excellent citizen.

Hoch & Montague opened their new place on the corner of Main and Second streets on Monday evening. The place is nicely fitted up, the wood-work oak grained while the walls are nicely papered (the work of Schmidt, the artist,) and a twenty foot mirror 5½ feet high is ranged along the south wall. A nice lunch consisting of all kinds of baked meats and fish now spread to which the crowd did ample justice. It was as much as eleven o'clock when all had fully partaken of the boys' hospitality.

A hilariously inclined individual, (from Warren) stepped into a brilliantly-lighted wet goods reffetory on Monday evening and stepping up to the bar produced a $5 bill and demanded that the bar-keeper proceed to "set-em-up" for the boys—but no sooner had he given his order than the door opened suddenly and in walked an irate female who caught the aforesaid bibulously inclined individual by the collar with one hand while with the other she deftly raked in the $5 bill aforesaid as she exclaimed in a voice keyed up to high C. with wrath and ill-suppressed emotion: "Not much, Willyyum, not if the court knows herself which she thinks she do! You just mog right out o' yere with me!" and the man—though a big six-footer proceeded to "mog" along out with the alacrity of a flea—"and he never come back"—not that aft., at least.

As the sheriff and his deputies were bringing some prisoners from the Moorhead jail last week, a short distance from Ada, one of them, James Murray, managed to slip the handcuffs from his wrist and rising suddenly from his seat ran out upon the platform and jumped off the the train followed closely by the sheriff who also jumped from the flying train and was pitched about promiscuously. He gathered himself together as quickly as possible and began to search for his prisoner but that individual had vanished in the early dawn and was out of sight. The sheriff was without overcoat, cap, mittens or overshoes and soon found it necessary to go to the nearest house to procure these necessary articles, then after a brief search further he went to Ada where he secured help and resumed the search. The man was last heard from at a house several miles west of Ada where he had stopped to thaw out awhile and get a lunch when he left going toward Dakota. He has not reported as yet and it is feared that he will not unless he is obliged to. A reward of $50 is offered for his re-capture.

FORCED TO DISGORGE.

Chief Gonyea Captures Two Thieves and Recovers $2,000.

Chief Gonyea is making a reputation as a good bit of a detective and the case that he has just finished adds another feather to his cap. Last week a saloon-keeper at Hallock had $2000 stolen from him one evening. He came into his saloon with the roll of bills to relieve the bar-keeper who was going out for the evening and the bar-keeper remarked to him that he ought not to be so careless, or "somebody would go through him sometime." The saloon-keeper, who was pretty full remarked that he guessed he knew enough to take care of his money, and the bar-keeper and a man named Synder, soon went out. Shortly thereafter the bar-keeper returned and found the saloon-keeper asleep and the money was gone. Suspicion naturally attached to the man Snyder, becoming a certainty when on Saturday he announced his intention of going to Chicago that night. A warrant was issued and his person and trunk was searched but nothing was found and he was allowed to take the train; however after he left a telegam was sent to Louis Gonyea, our chief of police instructed him to see what he could find. When the train reached this city, Mr. Snyder was invited to go to police headquarters and the trunk was taken there. Nothing was found on the man. In the trunk among other things was found several rolls of butter. These Louis probed and in one discovered a foreign substance, (not hair.) Cutting open the roll of butter $1000 was discovered which broke Synder all up and he confessed all, saying that his brother in Hallock had the rest and telling the chief how he could get it. On Sunday morning the chief went to Drayton on the N. P. and from there by team to Hallock and on Monday morning a warrant was sworn out for the other Snyder and the money found where it had been hidden in a meat block in Synder's butcher shop. Both men will explain to the grand jury how it all happened meanwhile our chief will wear a large sized feather in his cap as something of a detective himself.

Deeds for Polk County Farms.

Over 100 patents were received at the local land office last week. The following is a list of those in Polk county whose patents are amongst this batch: Rich Hunt, Jas. Leblanc, Mrs. Mary Peterson, Ole Gunderson, Jas. Normanden, Nils C. Rood, Knute G. Overland, Gudmund O. Ishang, Peter H. Gjerde, Eric Oppegaard, Chris. M. Hoganson, Carl M. Hanson, Gerard Palen, Rich. Olson, Alfred Savory. The last named gentleman settled on his land in 1872, but his claim was disputed by the Great Northern railway company, as Mr. Savory's land is within the railroad land grant, and it was not until March 11th, 1892, that he was allowed to make final proof. He had made settlement on the land before the railroad grant attached and his claim was held to be good.

Red Lake Falls is enjoying a genuine ghost sensation. One week ago last Friday, J. B. Carle, a veteran soldier, died aged about 67 years. On the following day he was buried—services being held in Fr. Arpin's church. Early on Sunday morning succeeding the funeral Fr. Arpin was attending to some duties in the church not thinking of Mr. Carle when a man entered the church dressed as Mr. Carle was, when on earth and looking and acting as Mr. Carle did except that the man's face was as black as a coal. The priest spoke to him and the man responded in Mr. Carle's voice, telling the priest that he had not been a good Catholic while on earth and that he—the priest had not scored him half severe enough in the funeral sermon. After a while the man—or apparition, departed and the priest was so unsettled by the interview with the ghost as to be unable to attend to the duties of the day and now the good people of the Falls are puzzling themselves over the matter—trying to arrive at a reasonable explanation.

Why we laugh! How we laugh! What we laugh at! McClary's lecture, "The Mission of Mirth," will tell you and show you all about it Tuesday night in the M. E. Church.

O. C. Bergland received two thoroughbred registered Cotswold rams from Waukesha, Wis., last week which he brought up to the JOURNAL office for the inspection and approval of our agricultural editor. They are fine heavy fellows one a yearling weighing 200 pounds and the other, a fine ram lamb seven months old, weighing 150 pounds. Mr. B. is one of our leading farmers, a careful shrewd man who does not believe in the all wheat idea, and for some time he has been thinking of adding sheep to his stock, and having looked into the matter thoroughly has decided to cross his flock with Cotswolds. The Cotswold is a fine heavy, mutton sheep having a long heavy coarse fleece and is no doubt one of the best breeds for the Northwestern farmer to raise. While the Merino beats the world for fineness of wool its carcass is very small and not as well adapted for mutton purposes so that about all they amount to is for their wool which will bring no more per animal, up here, than the wool from the Cotswold, the Shropshire, the Southdown or any of the heavier, coaser-wooled breeds. There may be other Cotswolds in the county but we have not heard of them. The most of the large sheep are Shropshire.

The Sauk Centre Tribune says of Rev. Thos. McClary's lecture: "He spoke without notes, is a fine elocutionist possessed of rare dramatic powers and excels as a mimic." Don't fail to hear him Tuesday night.

The Criminal cases disposed of by Judge Mills—Three Candidates For Stillwater.

Cummings, the East Grand Forks Embezzler, Found Guilty—Will Appeal to Supreme Court.

Court Will Adjourn To day—The Next Term Will Commence March 1st, '93.

TUESDAY, DEC. 13th, 1892.

Dexter A. Smith vs. M. O. Linden; suit on a promissory note, was called and a verdict directed by the court in favor of the plaintiff for $65.15.

State vs. Wm. Graham came up next in order. William was charged with trying to corner some pants at Mossefin & Lindell's store without putting up the customary margin therefor. The pants were found behind a door and William behind a jewelry store. Uncle Walworth, the venerable vender of peanuts and pop corn, identified the defendant as a man he had seen take the pants down—that is, the stolen ones—from a counter. As the evidence, however, was very slight against the prisoner, the jury found him not guilty.

John Wayne thereupon changed the luck of the state by pleading guilty to grand larceny in the second degree, and Alfred Mortimer and August Nelson heaped the measure by pleading guilty of the same offense.

Stern Justice then took her first whack at vindication by a sentence imposed upon Con Davis, convicted of assault in second degree, but recommended by the jury to the mercy of the court. All correspondence with Con for the next two years should be addressed, Stillwater, Minn.

The county attorney not being ready with any of the criminal cases court was adjourned until

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 14th, 1892.

State vs. Johnston, charged with stealing binding twine from a car at East Grand Forks was next called but was not concluded.

Mortimer and Nelson were brought up for sentence. In view of their youth, 16 and 18 respectively, the court gave them a good talking to and ten days in jail. These are the boys who went into a hardware store and took some revolvers, etc.

THURSDAY, DEC. 15th, 1892.

The trial of the case of the State of Minnesota vs. Wm. Johnston was resumed by the defendant being put upon the stand in his own defense. He denied having broken into the car where the twine was or that he had taken any twine in any other manner. He explained the possession by him of a bale of twine to the satisfaction of the jury who, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict of not guilty. All in attendance upon court during the trial were in deep sympathy with Johnston's wife, who has stood faithfully by his side during his troubles and has worked hard to secure proper legal aid for her husband.

Jens O. Rude of the mercantile firm of Norsving & Rude, McIntosh, pleaded not guilty to an indictment for grand larceny in the second degree, and to another indictment for petit larceny. Rude and his partner are accused of collecting money for themselves on notes that they had previously transferred to the Scandia bank.

State vs. Fritz Michaels was an appeal from justice court where the defendant had been found guilty of assault and battery upon the person of John Obrecht. The plot was laid at the Cleveland house in this city, the chief feature in it consisting of calling each other bad names, snapping of fingers in each others faces, etc., and referring to each other's children as of canine descent. Both the defendant and the plaintiff were quite old men, "and should have known better." From the testimony which was given in low Dutch with an occasional English word for the court reporter to build a record on, Mr. Watts gathered enough to interpret his side of the case to the jury, and his client was thereupon declared not guilty.

FRIDAY, DEC. 16th.

The readers of the JOURNAL no doubt bear in mind the extensive wheat operations of C. L. Comings, of East Grand Forks, during last season, his subsequent trip to California, his arrest there and his being brought back to this county for trial. The first of the four indictments against him was brought up for trial at the above date, and the jury after a prolonged session found Comings guilty of grand larceny in the first degree. Some surprise was expressed at the verdict, as the state presented a rather weak case. The defense, lead by Mr. A. C. Wilkinson of this city and Mr. Banks of Grand Forks, was ably conducted and well summed up. As soon as the jury had announced their verdict the defendant's attorneys entered a motion for a new trial, the motion was denied, and an appeal immediately taken. The other indictments against Cummings will not be tried this term. Pending the appeal Cummings will be released upon furnishing proper bonds. The case took all Friday to try and most of

SATURDAY, DEC. 17th. 1892.

State of Minnesota vs. Torkel and Johannes Hailand was taken up and disposed of. This was another "fighting scrap" case and was treated by the jury as the rest of its kind—not guilty.

Court was thereupon adjourned to Monday 19th, by Judge Mills who took this occasion to bid good bye to the jurors and court officers, stating that this was his last day of court in Polk county; the judge thanked them all for their co-operation in his work during the last six years and wished them success in the future.

MONDAY, DEC. 19th, 1892.

Hon. Geo. W. Holland from Brainerd, judge of that judicial district, presided at the opening of the court. The case of the State vs. John Connelly was the first called. The case ranks as one of the foremost of the "causes celebres" tried during this term, the charge in its being "carnal knowledge of children." The "child" in this case proved to be a buxom lass of (alleged) sixteen whose appearance indicated that her play days were over and were soon to be spent in the performance of maternal duties. Some letters, written by the young woman to one Tom Nicholson, and in which she claimed that he was the only one whom she had allowed to taste love's forbidden fruit, weakened the case of the state materially, and this together with other testimony in the same line and the denial of any crime on the part of the defendant, resulted in the jury bringing a verdict of not guilty. The defense was ably conducted by Messrs. Ed. George and E. M. Stanton, and occupied two days including Tuesday Dec, 20th.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 21ST.

No jury business was taken up and the day was spent in hearing motions etc.

COURT CULLINGS.

Judges Mills went to Ada last Sunday night where he will finish the regular November term; as good luck would have it Judge Holland of Brainard had time to come here, otherwise we would have had no court this week. This is relatively the largest district in the state and keeps a judge hustling.

It now looks as if the present term would be adjourned Thursday night, the 22 Dec. At all events it will be as soon as Friday night. The time at which it will convene again has been determined to the first Monday in March.

The Connelly trial drew a crowded house. Partly merit, but mostly advertising.

The county fathers are thinking of changing the inside arrangement of the court room. That is right, daddies! And when you have done so build a new court house round it, one that will be large enough for the county's need.

Christmas will be observed by the Methodist Episcopal church as follows: Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock pastor's sermon to congregation and Sunday school on "A Personal visit to Bethlehem." Sabbath evening at 7:30 sermon on "The Births of the World's gods." Monday evening the Sunday school will enjoy a Christmas tree, with appropriate exercises.

Last week was the best week for subscriptions we have had since fall collections began. To all who thus favored us we return our hearty thanks, and we trust the good work will go on until the list stands clear for once, except those who have asked for and obtained different arrangements. We would like to hear from all, and we intend to hear from some who are keeping strangely quiet.

The residence of Mat Hilda, a farmer living eight miles southwest of the city, was destroyed by fire early on Saturday morning. Mr. H. was attending to the chores at the barn while Mrs. H. was preparing breakfast and the children were in a bed room where a light was burning when Mrs. H. was startled by screams from the children and running into the bedroom found the room full of fire, originating from the overturned lamp. It was with difficulty that the children were rescued from the burning house which was entirely consumed together with its contents. A subscription was raised to provide another house for the destitute sufferers.

The Gypsy Camp

At the M. E. church parlors on Thursday evening of last week was carried out according to the program printed in the last issue of the JOURNAL. Each one sustained their part so well that any attempt to particularize would be useless, suffice it to say that the house was as full as it could be and all enjoyed the exercises immensely—especially the "Gypsy soup" to which all who desired were treated. So well pleased were those who were present and so unstinted in their praises that all who did not attend are clamoring for a repetition and it may be that their wish will be gratified at an early day.

CHRISTMAS AT BLACK EAGLE COLLIERY.

BY J. H. CONNELLY.

COPYRIGHT, 1892, BY AMERICAN PRESS ASS'N.

CHAPTER I.

During all October and half of November no work was done in the Black Eagle mine, except by the pumps draining the sump. The "coal pool"—a combination of anthracite mine owners formed to check overproduction and keep up the price of coal—had arbitrarily ordered a "shut down." Such stoppage of labor at one or more of the numerous collieries in the anthracite fields was common, but the length of time prescribed for it in this case was unusual and not without a purpose. A general reduction of miners' wages was in contemplation, and the Black Eagle had been selected as the point at which the first blow should be struck for its inauguration. In their best times the 300 men employed there, with their families, lived from "hand to mouth," and it was only reasonable to expect that the exhaustion of their scanty resources by a prolonged "shut down" would leave them so close to starvation that they would be glad to get work at any rate. Then the new scale, thus established at one point, would be made general as rapidly as circumstances would permit.

The Black Eagle miners, however, displayed an unexpected obstinacy in resistance to the pretty scheme. They actually refused to go to work under the new scale, and a "strike" was declared. That signified nothing to the "coal pool," which was helped by it in keeping down production, but was a terrible misfortune for the 300 and their wretched families. Cold and hunger were in all their comfortless homes; bitterness and almost despair in their hearts. Nevertheless in dogged endurance they struggled through the latter half of November and three weeks of December, obtaining from workers in other mines sufficient aid to barely maintain life.

Christmas eve came, and still there was upon the surface no indication of a change in the situation, but a prescient impression began to be generally felt that a crisis was rapidly approaching.

The small and repellently ugly frame houses of the miners were scattered in an irregular double row along the rugged road on the bleak hillside above the colliery. In one of them this Christmas eve, in the darkness, were to be heard two voices—those of a woman and of a child.

"Please, gran'ma, do light tandle," pleaded the little one beseechingly. "Please do. It so dark. Ally hate dark."

"Try and get used to the dark, dear. Ye'll have to get used to everything ye hate most when ye're older," replied the woman.

"Ally wants see pitty picture: please light tandle, gran'ma."

"Oh! darlin, it's the last one we've got, and supposin you'd be took sick in the night, what would we do then for a light?"

"Ally won't be sick. Please light tandle."

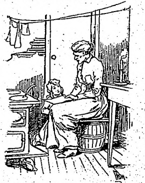
"Well, well, dear; it's a little thing to deny a child, the Lord knows. Give it here off the table."

The woman groped about on the floor for a twig from a bunch laid by the stove to dry for kindling, poked it among the few coals still glowing in the stove, and when it blazed lighted with it the candle handed to her by the child. By the feeble light it could be seen that she was sitting upon a low seat—a bit of board laid across the top of an empty powder keg—in front of the stove. She was gaunt and pale, her hair was streaked with gray, and her thin calico dress was patched on the breast and arms. The child—a little girl with curly golden hair—knelt beside her knees, and thrusting a fragment of paper in her hands said eagerly:

"See, gran'ma: pitty picture: tell Ally 'bout it."

"It's Santa Claus."

"Who Santy Taus, gran'ma?"



"WHO SANTY TAUS, GRAN'MA?"

"He's a fine old gentleman who brings Christmas gifts to them he has a likin for; mostly to children."

"Oh! Will he bring Ally anyfin?"

"Indeed he won't. I'll go bail for that. Far enough he'll keep himself from the Black Eagle colliery."

"I dess I'm too little. He hasn't heard 'bout me yet."

"It'd make no differ if he had. He isn't makin acquaintances of our sort. Make up your mind to that."

"Will he never bring Ally anything?"

"Maybe, when you're old and tired out, and heart sore, and learn to pray for it, he may bring ye—a coffin."

"I hate Santy Taus."

"Ye needn't child. He's like all the rest. It's the way of the world. The richer and happier folks are, the better he likes them, and he's never tired doin for them that don't need his help. But he scorns the likes of uz."

The tears gathered in little Alice's eyes as she sadly regarded the picture of cruel, unsympathetic Santa Claus. She but vaguely comprehended the bitterness of the old woman's feeling, yet the spirit of it touched her and made life seem drearier than ever before.

"Where did you get the picture?"

"Found it in road." And she threw it away. "Ally tired, gran'ma. Want go by by."

"Go along, dear, and may the saints give you sweet sleep and fine dreams. Sure they're the best things ye'll ever know."

The child disappeared in a dark doorway to the right after kissing her grandmother good night. The woman sat still, with her elbows on her knees, her chin in her hands and her eyes glowering at the little grate, where the fire had ceased to show.

"The kindest thing he could bring to her this night would be the coffin. God forgive me for saying it," she muttered through her teeth.

The outer door was suddenly thrown open, and a man with a heavy burden in a sack on his shoulder staggered in. He dropped his load beside the stove with a "chuck" that shook the frail tenement, and blowing in his hollowed hands to warm them with his breath exclaimed:

"Cripes! But it's mortal cold. The fingers is nearly froze off of me crablin under the snow."

"Put yez feet up on the stove. They must be soakin," suggested the woman, rising and hastening to make up the fire with coal she took from the sack.

"That they are. I might as well be wearin fishin nets on my feet as them shoes. But what's the good of growlin: Sure they're no worse than your own my poor Eily."

"Ah! It's the bitter, black Christmas this is for uz."

"I met Fogarty," remarked the man after a little pause.

"The watchman?"

"Yes."

"I'd 'a' thought you'd show more marks of it, and you wake as you are wid the hunger. Are you hurted?"

"We didn't fight."

"No?"

"I'll tell ye how it was. He came on me unbeknownst, while I had my head down pickin among the culm, an the first thing I knew he was standin beside me. 'Andy Corrigan,' says he, 'don't you know it's agin ordhers for the strikers to be let pick coal from the culm pile?'"

"Bad luck to them that gev the ordhers," interjected the woman fervently.

"Amen! 'But,' says I, 'it's froze to death the childher will be, to say nothin of ourselves if we don't be let.'

"'Wid that,' says he, 'I've nothin to do. Ordhers is ordhers, and them's ordhers.'"

The woman, with a quick clutch at her back hair, let it fall in a loose, straggling mass on her bony shoulders, and raising her hands above her head in an attitude of imprecation exclaimed:

"May the curse of the needy and the hopeless fall upon!"——

"Howld on, woman! Howld on wid your cursin! Bide a bit till you get the rights of your message to the divil. It's mighty free with your curses you are."

"Sure it's all we have left to give."

"Maybe not. Hear me out. 'Now,' says he, 'I'm on my rounds, and I won't be back this way for two hours, and I don't want to find you here when I come again.'

"'God knows I hope you won't, for I'm nigh froze already, and the sack is half full.'

"'Wid snow, I suppose,' says he, wid a grin, and off he wint."

"Sure," exclaimed the woman, with a grim smile, "it was the same as tellin ye to take what ye needed!"

"That's how I understood it, and that's what I did."

"The blessin of the saints be on Fogarty. Sure it's a good heart he's got, even if he is a watchman."

"Gran'ma! It's so told!" called a little whimpering voice from the next room. Andy Corrigan quickly took off his jacket, and his wife carried it in to the child, whom she could be heard soothing while wrapping the garment about her.

"There, dear; lie still now and soon ye'll be warm as toast. Try and go to sleep and dream about the angels. This is Christmas eve, and they'll be all around ye tonight."

"Is Hugh in yet?" asked Andy when Eily returned to his side.

"He's not been home since mornin."

"Ah, the poor boy! It's to lave us his share of the meat he stays out. It's nearly all gone, isn't it?"

"Yes, but there's enough to last over Christmas."

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Corrigan was right. Hugh knew by experience—as thousands of coal miners have been compelled to learn—that a scanty breakfast of cornmeal mush daily would keep him alive, and that was all he proposed to take from the family's meager supply until the hard times should be over.

But something else kept him abroad just now. Strange, revolutionary ideas floating about filled him with anxiety.

"The rights of labor have too long been ignored. If justice is not peacefully accorded by capital, it must be compelled by force. The rich man smiles at seeing the wolf of starvation tearing his poor brother's throat, but the knife at his own will quickly teach him he, too, is but human. A man may possess a million dollars, but can have only one life. You cannot coerce the rich by mere interruption of their accumulation of wealth; to bring them to reason it is necessary to make them fear death."

Such were the things Hugh heard being said. And their author was one of the last men in the community from whom they might have been expected—old Emil Wagner—a little weazen faced, blue eyed German miner, who had been on the Black Eagle rolls for at least a dozen years past.

The English speaking miners generally did not take kindly to his ideas, but they were accepted as gospel by the Hungarians and Slavs, whose language he spoke and to whom he had endeared himself by many acts of kindness.

The strikers' executive committee, composed of David Evans, Patsey Garrity and Dan Cornell—a Welshman, an Irishman and an Englishman, as their names indicated—were not a little anxious about what "the foreigners" might do and the possible consequences involved. In the hope of curbing Wagner's pernicious influence they summoned him before a general meeting of the men on Christmas eve. The scene of the meeting was an impressive one. Having no room large enough to hold them, nearly all the 300 miners assembled in an open space in the woods, where they had stationed sentries to keep away spies. Their only light was that of the moon, fitfully bright, which accentuated the paleness of their rugged, careworn faces. Emil Wagner, being called upon to explain himself, said to them:

"Your contest must fail if not carried on upon a plane where you and your antagonists are equal, which is certainly not that of resources. The destitution and misery in your wretched homes should have convinced you of that by this time. Where, then, are the starving miner and the arrogant mine owner equal? Before the king of terrors—Death. Let your masters know that if you must starve you will not die alone: that those dear to you shall not die unavenged. Make yourselves feared, if you would be respected. Kill, if you yourselves wish to live."

"Who would you want killed?" gasped the English committeeman, quite aghast.

"I want nobody killed, but it seems to me the necessities of the situation include using Superintendent Brattle as a warning."

"Why? What has he ever done to you?" demanded Garrity.

"To me! Nothing whatever. And even if he had done me personally every possible injury, not on my own account would I wish his life taken. But he is the representative of the power antagonizing us, and his fate would warn our masters that their slaves are in deadly earnest."

"What's the matter," shouted a striker, "with touching capital where it is tenderest—in its pocket? Burn the breaker. Flood the mine!"

"And destroy the field of your employment for months to come," responded Wagner promptly; "hurting yourselves worst, since the county would have to pay all the damages."

The discussion was long and grew hot. Finally Chairman David Evans "sat down" on Wagner, as he had all along intended to do.

"It ill becomes a man, old and intelligent as you are, Mr. Wagner," said he, "to talk in that murderous way, and we want to hear no more of it."

That was the general sentiment of the English speaking strikers, but when Evans' words were translated to the brutal and obstinate Slavs they scowled and walked away in grim silence.

Hugh Corrigan, though too young to take any prominent part, felt a vivid interest in the proceedings and had a lively appreciation of the perilous quality in the forces Emil Wagner had set in motion. He knew that Mr. Brattle's danger was very real and not to be charmed away by the Welshman's conservative rebuke. And if Wagner only looked upon Mr. Brattle as a superintendent it was altogether as a man Hugh thought of him and conceived it his duty to warn him. On his own account solely? Well, hardly.

But Mr. Brattle had a daughter—Mary—who, in the young man's quite unbiased and critical estimation, was beyond all question the sweetest and prettiest girl in the world. That decided opinion had been arrived at by him in the short space of two hours upon a memorable afternoon six months ago, when he acted as guide for Miss Mary Brattle and three or four other visitors through the intricate depths of the Black Eagle mine.

Clearly it was an imperative necessity that he should, for her sweet sake, warn her father against the murderous Slavs. He did not shut his eyes to the fact that a striker who made himself in anywise prominent, even by the doing of a conspicuously good deed, was pretty certain to be a marked man and made to suffer for it when the strike was ended.

The road he took was a rough and dangerous path over the mountain, but enabled him to reach the superintendent's house, which lay about half a mile beyond the breaker, with but little risk of being seen by any one who might take exception to his mission.

There were no lights in Mr. Brattle's windows when Hugh reached there, for the hour was late, but his first timid tap with the brass knocker on the door brought as an immediate response the demand in a feminine voice from a window opened behind closed blinds:

"What is wanted?"

He recognized the sweet voice, and his own trembled a little as he replied, "Is Mr. Brattle at home?"

"No; Mr. Brattle is not at home," and the speaker slightly opening the slats to peep out exclaimed, "Oh, it's you, is it, Mr. Corrigan?"

Delighted astonishment at that recognition so overwhelmed the young man that he could not exactly take in the sense of what she told him, and he stammered, "I would like to see him."

"He went out with—with a friend half an hour ago or more. Is it anything particular?"

"Oh, Miss Brattle, I can't tell you how particular it is. I have come to warn him not to go among the men, for his life is in danger."

"I did not think I would ever hear my father threatened by a man of the Black Eagle colliery."

"For God's sake, don't misunderstand me. Can't you know the difference between a threat and a warning. There are men who would knock my head off for coming here tonight to tell him this. Trouble makers are telling about that he is going to bring in more Slavs, with Pinkerton men to protect them, and that makes the men hot. And they have some bad advisers among them."

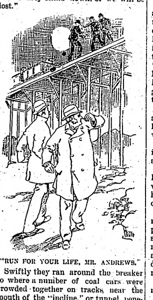
"I'm sure he would have no hand in such a wicked thing. He would resign sooner."

Before Hugh could reply they were startled by the dull sound of an explosion in the direction of the colliery.

CHAPTER III.

Mr. Brattle, when he left home, was accompanied by a stout but active gentleman, a little past the prime of life, whom he addressed as Mr. Andrews. They strolled as far as the company's breaker without seeing anybody, and stood chatting in its shadow for a few minutes. Then they started up the road toward the miners' houses. Thick cloud patches drifting across the sky made the moon's bright light fitful. It was in a moment when her radiance made everything almost as clear as day that they left the shadow, and hardly had they taken a dozen steps in the open road when they heard in the air above them a burst of Slavonic execration, coupled with Mr. Brattle's name. On a high trestlework supporting a car track were three Slavs, looking like giants up there in the moonlight, who instantly began, with unpleasant expertness of aim, hurling lumps of coal and heavy iron missiles at them.

"Run for your life, Mr. Andrews," exclaimed the superintendent, leaping back into the breaker's shadow; "you can't reason with those animals. Hide before they climb down, or we will be lost."



"RUN FOR YOUR LIFE, MR. ANDREWS."

Swiftly they ran around the breaker to where a number of coal cars were crowded together on tracks near the mouth of the "incline," or tunnel, penetrating the depths of the mine. Into one of these they clambered, and laid themselves flat down in the snow and coal grime on its bottom. Trestlework overhead made all here obscure. Hardly were they hidden when they heard their pursuers running, stumbling, panting and cursing, after them.

The fellows were at a loss where to look for their intended victims. They held their breaths and listened. All was still. They sought tracks, but the snow, trampled before by many feet, betrayed nothing. A few of the cars were peered into, but those were evidently deemed too open to be probable hiding places, and search in that direction was only cursory and ineffective. At the mouth of the incline they stood and jabbered, evidently agreeing upon that as the shelter the hunted men had found. It was a likely place. An armed man there might, in that darkness, kill a dozen following him.

Double tracks, 1,700 feet long, were laid down in the incline for loaded cars to come up on one side while empty ones descended on the other. On these tracks the murderous Slavs placed two cars abreast, fastening across their fronts by a chain a stout beam, long enough to sweep the entire width of the tunnel and inevitably crush any one lurking there when the ponderous engine of destruction was launched. One of the cars used for this purpose was next to that in which the fugitives lay concealed. Just when they were about setting their infernal contrivance in motion one of them called a halt and made some proposition, to which his companions seemed to accord enthusiastic assent. Then he ran away and was gone full half an hour, while they remained on guard. He brought back with him a tin can, such as those in which the "oil well shooters" carry nitroglycerin. This they ingeniously fastened lightly before the crossbeam in such a position that it would surely be knocked off if the timber were at all displaced by touching anything.

Slowly and laboriously they pushed the joined cars forward to the verge of the slope; when the mass moved by its own weight with momentarily accelerating momentum. The moment it started they ran swiftly and silently away. Up from the throat of the mine came a dull rumbling, quickly increasing to a roar, which culminated in a terrific explosion that seemed to shake the mountain. The car containing Mr. Brattle and his companion was tipped on its side, throwing them out, but fortunately without hurting them.

"Quick, now!" urged the superintendent. "We must get away from here before the crowd comes."

They ran a little way across the flat, and then up the hillside road until coming voices alarmed them, when they flung themselves down in the shadow of a clump of bushes behind a little pile of mine timbers by the road. Gangs of excited miners rushed by until it seemed as if all the men in the community must have gone down to the breaker. Still the fugitives did not venture to move. To return to Mr. Brattle's house they would have had to pass through the crowd of strikers, which in the light of their recent experience hardly seemed safe, or go by the mountain path, which the superintendent did not know.

"If we stay here much longer I shall be frozen stiff," remarked Mr. Andrews in a whispered growl. "If we'd had just a little sense we would have staid in the house and fixed up the children's Christmas tree."

"Well, this moonlight ramble was not on my programme, you know."

"And I was seventy sorts of a fool for insisting on it. I know that now. I should have remembered what I have often thought—that you, here on the ground, understood the situation much better than we could in New York."

"I hope to convince you of that. You shall see for yourself"——

"If I live. Where the mischief do you suppose they got the nitroglycerin?"

"No telling. Stole it somewhere, I suppose."

Neither of the fugitives noticed a man coming up from the breaker until he, arriving within sound of their speech, halted and uttered a sharp "Hello there!" of challenge. It was Hugh on his way home after learning the little concerning the explosion that could be guessed at that night—the Slavs having had the sense to keep accurate knowledge to themselves. His hasty imagining, when he heard the voices, was that the speakers were Slavs in ambush for the man he meant to save, and it was a great relief to his mind when Mr. Brattle replied, uttering his name in a tone of unmistakably gratified recognition:

"A friend and myself have escaped from some fellows who wanted to kill us. Will you help us to get away from here?"

"With all my heart. Jump out here and go with me. We'll not be likely to meet any one and can keep ahead of the crowd that will be coming up presently." He led them straight to his father's house, and when they had entered said, as he lighted the candle: "Here you will be safe until near daylight, when you can try for home. Everybody will be asleep then, and I will guide you by a road few travel at any time."

Mr. Andrews looked about him with a shudder, and sinking upon a stool put his frozen feet on the stove hearth to warm.

"Something ugly has happened in the incline," remarked Hugh, "but nobody seems to know rightly what it is."

"I know all about it," replied Mr. Brattle, and related their adventure with the Slavs, asking in conclusion how far their feeling was shared by the other men.

"Not at all, sir," answered the young man warmly. "Barring the cattle imported by the company the time of the strike, and perhaps one old crank, there's none would harm a hair of your head, and it will go hard with the Slavs who did that devil's job tonight when the men find them out."

"You feel sure of what you say?" demanded Mr. Andrews sharply.

"As that I am alive."

"Then I wish you would go at once to the leaders of the strike—I take it for granted the men have leaders—and ask them to come here at daylight for a conference. This strike can and must be ended immediately. I know I'm giving you trouble, but will make it worth your while."

"Don't speak of that, sir. I'd do anything honest to end the strike."

"Go ahead, then, and we will await here your return."

Hugh went immediately. When he was gone the superintendent said:

"Look about you, Mr. Andrews, and see the home of an honest, sober, industrious and skillful miner—as Andrew Corrigan is. Even the necessaries of life are scant. Mere comforts here would be luxuries. There may be a little cornmeal in the cupboard, but no other food, I would wager. Open that dinner can hanging on the wall, and ten to one you will find a block of wood in it. Do you know why? That its lightness may not betray its emptiness when the man carries it down into the mine with him as a public pretense that he can afford a midday meal. See that patched gown and trousers hung on the clotheshorse to dry for daily use tomorrow. I'm glad you have a chance to see this for yourself. I have long wanted to get one director with a heart in him to come here and learn the situation as it really exists."

"But," stammered Mr. Andrews, "this is during a rather prolonged strike."

"They were only a little better off when they had work: more cornmeal and perhaps now and then a bit of salt pork when there were not too many 'shut downs,' but not much else. Nothing has gone to the pawnbrokers."

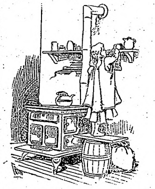
CHAPTER IV.

Hearing some movement in the next room, the men noiselessly stepped into the shadow of the clotheshorse. A pretty little mite of a barefoot girl, with light golden curls framing her pale, thin face, appeared in the door, blinking at the candle as if wondering at its being alight. A man's coarse cardigan jacket dangled around her ragged little nightdress, and she carried in one hand a small stocking:

"Don't tare what gran'ma says," she audibly soliloquized. "Santy Taus might tum. Ally dream Santy Taus b'ing gran'ma 'n gran'pa shoes, 'n dolly for Ally, 'n watch f' Untle Hugh—lots to eat."

While she talked she climbed up on a stool and put her stocking on the mantel, with a chunk of coal on its toe and the top dangling down—an excellent symbol, Mr. Brattle thought, of the miner's prospects in life.

"Do, p'ease, good Mr. Santy Taus, bring us sumfin to eat anyway," she said pleadingly, clambered down and toddled off to bed. Presently they heard her whimper, "Oh, I's so told:" then all was still.



"DO, P'EASE, GOOD MR. SANTY TAUS, BRING US SUMFIN TO EAT ANYWAY."

Mr. Andrews came from behind the screen with tears in his eyes and in his hand a wad of bank notes, which he silently poked into the little stocking, and then, sitting down again, sank into a reverie. Mr. Brattle did not disturb him. Silence reigned, broken only by the mournful howls of the wind, which rose after midnight. At length the two men whispered anxiously about Hugh's protracted absence. Something they feared must have happened to him. He came with the dawn, looking so worn and haggard that his appearance startled them. They didn't know it, but he had gone through over twenty hours of almost continuous exertion without a morsel of food, and that as the culmination of weeks of starvation. He reported:

"One of the men, the most important, had gone to Laurel Run, and I went over after him."

"Fourteen miles, there and back, over an exceptionally abominable mountain road," Mr. Brattle explained, sotto voce to his companion.

"He will be here," continued Hugh, "before 8 o'clock. I thought Miss Brattle might be anxious, so I stopped on the way back to tell her you were safe, sir."

"Thank you, Hugh. That was a good, kind thing to do, and not a little one, for it took you a good half mile out of your way, and you must have been very tired."

"Oh, that's nothing, sir. I'm glad I went."

"Did you see Mary herself?"

"The minute after I knocked! She was so anxious she had not gone to bed, but when I left her mind was easy. She told me to wish you a merry Christmas, sir."

"My God!" exploded Mr. Andrews. "The idea of a merry Christmas here!"

"It depends on you," responded Mr. Brattle to him in a low tone.

Presently Mr. Corrigan, tousled, testy and surprised, emerged from his bedroom. All the hospitality at his command he extended to his visitors—he put more coal in the stove. Then he took down the woman's gown from the clotheshorse and handed it into the bedroom that Mrs. Corrigan might dress herself. When she came out she brought the coarse gray blanket from her bed and laid it over the sleeping child in place of the jacket, which Mr. Corrigan then put on.

Mary Brattle came over on horseback at a very early hour, bringing with her a big basket full of bacon, bread and coffee.

"I knew you had guests this morning," she said to Mrs. Corrigan, "whom it is my duty to take care of, so I hope you will not be offended at my helping you to entertain them." Her tone was so frank and friendly that it won the matron's good will at once, and no rebellious pride prejudiced her against the prospect of a good breakfast. In a few minutes the bacon was sizzling in a pan, and for the first time in many months the aroma of coffee amazed the atmosphere of the miner's home. Alice awoke and sniffed it. With a scramble and plunge she was out of bed and in the middle of the family room, staring with wonder dilated eyes at the preparations for breakfast and quite oblivious of the presence of strangers. Throwing up her hands, with a shrill scream of ecstatic joy, she cried:

"Oh, gran'ma, Santy Taus did tum!"

The strikers' committee appeared on time, and the superintendent formally introduced to them his companion, "Mr. George Andrews, the new president of the Black Eagle Coal Mining company."

"Men," said Mr. Andrews to them, "I have only recently been elected to the directorate and made president of this company. Until now I have never been in the anthracite country, knew nothing of the conditions of existence here and would have been powerless to change the company's policy if I had known. All that is changed. We have a new management. I know the facts—thanks to Mr. Brattle—and am happy to say that I have power to act as my judgment dictates. Work will be resumed in the colliery tomorrow at old rates; 'shut downs' will be rare in the future, and all the old hands are invited to take their places again—except the Slavs and Hungarians; we will have no more of them."

The happy news flew abroad as light spreads when the sun rises; joyous hurrahs everywhere welcomed the ending of the strike, and "Merry Christmas" was heard on all sides from lips which certainly would not have uttered the words that day—except perhaps in bitter irony—but for the unexpected ending of their misery. And Mr. Andrews helped to make the day a merry one by ordering the opening of the company's store and distribution of such liberal largesse of provisions as banished hunger and carried comfort into every honest home in the community.

Lane's Medicine Moves the Bowels Each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of the state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

THE latest report of Mr. Blaine's condition is that he is improving.

BRONSON STRAIN, editor of the Battle Lake Review, is a candidate for enrolling clerk of the state senate. A more deserving or more capable applicant would be hard to find.

THE blind Goddess, Justice, may now consider herself endorsed. Ada Rehan will personate her in the silver statue to be made by the state of Montana for exhibition at the World's Fair.

CAPT. VAN BORNSTADT, who has occupied the position of stenographer in Judge Mills' court for the past six years, is probably without a superior in the state as a court stenographer. His knowledge of law—gained while practicing as an attorney at Moorhead—makes him familiar with court work and better qualified for the position. When his labors cease—Jan. 1st, 1893—he will probably return to the practice of law at Moorhead.

THE St. Cloud Times says: "Two years ago, in the legislature, Senator Donnelly frequently spoke, and just as frequently began his eloquent speech thus: Speaking as I do for 60,000 voters—solid yeomanry of the great state of Minnesota!" The question now is how will Donnelly explain the shrinkage? By no hocus pocus can he possibly speak for more than 40,000 in January. Like the nigger's little black pigs, the other 20,000 'got away sum whar in the woods.'"

JUDGE MILLS retires from the bench with a good record. Although his district was large—too large for one judge—he has kept up with his work in a remarkable manner, and he closes his labors with his work well cleared up and everything in good shape to turn over to his successor. Judge Ives, a good lawyer, a hard worker, a conscientious and painstaking judge, he has earned for himself an enviable reputation, and gained the friendship of all whom he has come in contact with. The state judiciary loses one of its best members in the retirement of Judge Mills.

SIFT the opposition to the re-election of Senator C. K. Davis and you find that it comes from disappointed office-seekers in the republican party, who have chosen the Globe, a democratic organ, as their mouth-piece. These fellows do not like the senator because he would not neglect public business to secure for them the offices they sought, so they say "he is no good and must be downed." The Globe don't like to see Davis succeed himself because Davis is altogether too brilliant a man, too good a public servant and the Globe willingly consents to do the dirty work for disgruntled politicians—a fit instrument for such work.

THE case of Rhinehart vs. Anderson will probably not be reached during this term of court. Mr. Rhinehart who was defeated by Robt. Anderson for county commissioner in the Fifth district by twelve votes, contests Anderson's election on the grounds that Mr. Anderson acted as judge of election in his precinct, contrary to law—he being a candidate for office—and that he also acted as returning clerk. There was only one vote for Rhinehart in Anderson's precinct, and Mr. Rhinehart will try to show that there were enough votes cast for him in said precinct to change the result. Mr. Rhinehart is not anxious for the office, but he thinks he was not beaten fairly and wants to test the matter in the courts.

IN his paper, Farm Stock and Home S. M. Owen opposes the proposition to increase the number of supreme court judges in this state to seven instead of five as now constituted. Neither does he want an additional judge appointed in the Fourteenth Judicial district, or the district divided. The JOURNAL is not well enough posted on the work which the supreme court has to take care of to say whether two additional judges are necessary or not, but it does know that this Fourteenth Judicial district is too large for one judge to properly attend to. It embraces the counties of Clay, Becker, Norman, Polk, Marshall, and Kittson—all large and populous counties. In order to cover the whole district, a great deal of work must necessarily be put over from one term to another, causing additional expense to litigants. Prisoners committed to jail cannot have their cases taken up and acted upon as soon as they should, and a judge having so many cases to try, cannot give each one the consideration it demands. Mr. Owen thinks it a scheme to give Judge Mills a job. As assistant attorney-general of the state, Judge Mills, will be able to make more money than he could on the bench, so Mr. Owen's fears are are groundless in this respect.

READER, if you are one of those who have had this paper sent to your address for several years—and have paid no attention to the statements sent you from this office from time to time, we are talking right to you, now. We have worked for you faithfully for the time you have had our paper, and we are entitled to some consideration in the matter at least, and WE PROPOSE TO HAVE IT! Heretofore we have been very lenient with all, too lenient with some who have shown by their actions that they are not capable of appreciating lenient usage but now we intend to change this deal and some of these cases will settle, with us with costs added. IN EVERY CASE that has not reported to us within a reasonable time we shall place the account in the hands of our attorney with instructions to collect or get a judgment. Now, please do not misunderstand us in this matter. We are talking ONLY TO THOSE WHO HAVE PAID NO ATTENTION TO OUR STATEMENTS OF ACCOUNT sent them, and we give this last warning so that they, having had plenty of opportunity to avoid it, can not blame the JOURNAL management when they find that they have extra costs to pay. Having looked into the financial standing of our patrons this fall, we come pretty near knowing who are fully able to pay us the small sums they owe and we have fully made up our minds to find out what they mean by thus neglecting their business obligations. If you are one of the persons referred to, you will save yourself trouble and expense by a settlement with us at an early date. You know as well as we do, that our request is only just and reasonable, and you know that you yourselves would take some such action if you were in our place.

ENGLAND WANTS PROTECTION.

An agricultural conference is now being held in London, England, and among other things it has declared in favor of a protective tariff, and from the tone of the English press in commenting upon it, it is safe to presume that the English government must soon hearken to the voice of the people, and enact a protective tariff. The Pall Mall Gazette says the voice of protection is heard in the land definitely and clamorously and its breath is the very signal of a storm in the air. The conference, it says, is right in declaring that without protection it is useless to fight against foreign competition.

The St. James Gazette says that it rejoices that the farmers were so outspoken. The question must seriously and will hereafter be reckoned as a factor in English politics. Hereafter it will be useles to say that protection is not practical. The farmers have forced the pace.

Drainage.

The Red River Valley Drainage commission held a very important meeting at the city hall on Wednesday at which were present, Ezra G. Valentine, chairman, of Wilkin Co., John Erickson, of Clay Co., Geo. R. Roberts and J. P. Lunden, of Marshall county and Hon. B. Sampson, M. R. Brown and E. D. Childs, secretary, of Polk couty. Communications from absent members were read showing a far greater interest in this matter than ever appeared before, for while the members of this committee have worked early and late trying to accomplish something the majority of the people have not been fully alive to the importance of the subject, but the experience of last spring, when the extreme moisture of all our best lands prevented early sowing, thus insuring a yield of from 3 to 8 bushels per acre where from 25 to 30 bushels should have been harvested, and the experience of last fall, when so much of the land had to be left because it was too wet to plow, seems to have been a far more effective missionary than years of preaching and theorizing have been. People begin by a sad experience to realize the fact that thousands of dollars annually are lost to this valley on account of lack of proper drainage, and they begin to appreciate how easily this can be had, and they are now beginning to clamor for it in a way that will be effective. A committee, consisting of the chairman, E. G. Valentine, Geo. R. Roberts and M. R. Brown was appointed to draft a bill, which will be introduced early in the coming session, which bill when presented to the committee at their afternoon session was adopted. The old officers were re-elected by acclamation, and a committee to collect statistics, consisting of one in each county and three at large was elected. The JOURNAL has always been in favor of this project and is now encouraged to believe that something will at last be accomplished.

WAS FATAL TO SIX

BAD ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD

Six Men Were Killed and Five Very Seriously Injured in the Wreck—The Cars Catch Fire and Three Unfortunates Burned to a Crisp.

NELSON, Minn., Dec. 18.—A freight train telescoped the caboose of a wrecking train on the Great Northern road at this place at 12:30 a. m., and as a result six men are dead and five more are badly injured.

The crew of a freight were making a flying switch, when by some hitch several cars were ditched, completely obstructing traffic for several hours. A wrecking train was sent from St. Cloud to clear away the debris. The men worked from the main track, and when the track was clear the caboose was left standing on the main track preparatory to returning to the shops. Freight No. 16 came up from behind with orders to head into the side track for the night passenger train. A heavy grade leads down to Nelson station, and although the whole crew of the train were setting brakes, the momentum could not be checked in time, and the train crashed into the caboose of the wrecker, in which the workingmen had retired and gone to sleep. There were thirteen men in the caboose, but one of these, with a loud cry to the others, jumped and ran and escaped unhurt. The engineer and fireman of the frieght both jumped, the fireman, Henry Ross, striking something which crushed his shoulder.

The Horror of Fire Added.

Fire broke out immediately, and in a few minutes the whole wreck was reduced to coals. There was nothing on hand to fight the fire with and the onlookers were compelled to see three of the injured burn in the seething mass. No shrieks proceeded from these, indicating that life was already extinct. Groans had proceeded from one end of the caboose untouched by the fire and three men were pulled from there, but they were then all dead. The injured, with a little help, extricated themselves, but the body of John Engstrand, Jr., was burned to a crisp, bearing no resemblance to a once human form. Christ Mattson and an unknown man were also burned almost beyond recognition. Everything which could be done in the face of the awful difficulties to save the bodies from the wreck was done. The fire communicated to a woodpile and from there to an elevator, which was saved with difficulty.

The Victims.

The dead are:

NILS O. DOKKEN, of Alexandria.

JOHN ENGENSTRAND and SON, of Spruce Hill.

OLE MATTSON and his brother CHRIST MATTSON, of Osakis.

One whose name could not be learned.

The injured are:

AMBROSE LEE, head cut, nose broken and internal injuries.

THOMAS WELCH, of Boston, head cut and breast crushed in.

PATRICK HANNON, shoulder bruised.

DAVID REED, head cut and hand crushed.

KAHN BRUMMER, legs broken and injured internally; sent to St. Paul for treatment.

The coroner has not finished sitting yet and it is impossible to say what the verdict will be in regard to any blame attached.

FIREMEN KILLED AT ALBANY.

Seven Buried Under Falling Walls, Three of Whom Were Killed.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 20.—Human life proved to be the cost of extinguishing the confragration in the Fort Orange mill which broke out at noon. Shortly after 6 p. m. the members of steamer company No. 4, who were working inside of the ruins, were ordered home by the chief. As they proceeded to get out the east wall, which was standing sixty feet high, toppled over without a moment's warning, the upper half falling inward and the lower half outward. Seven men were buried under eight feet of debris. Willing hands were soon at work to extricate the unfortunate men.

James Shattuck, Jr., Bernard Bamer, Fred Bamer and John Whitnell were the first rescued. Of these only Bernard Bamer was completely buried and but for the quick work at rescue would have perished. Whitnell and Bernard Bamer were seriously injured and were taken to the hospital in the ambulance. The physician said Bernard Bamer would likely die, but thought Whitnell would pull through all right. Shattuck and Fred Bamer were not badly hurt. The firemen continued working on the ruins and in a few minutes came upon the dead bodies of Fireman Charles E. Marshall, foreman of steamer No. 4, and John Bridgeford. The body of Fred Amethor was recovered at 9:30 p. m. and was found to be badly crushed. He was unmarried.

Scaffold Gave Way.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 20.—While seven painters were at work on a scaffold in the corridor of the government building during the morning the structure gave way and all of them were thrown to the tiling, a distance of twenty feet. Four of them were dangerously injured and one of them possibly fatally.

Will Be Made Cardinals.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Most Rev. Michael Logue, Archbishop of Armagh and primate of all Ireland, and the Most Rev. William Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster, have received letters notifying them they will be made cardinals at the coming papal consistory.

Will Release the Paris Fund.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The News learns from its Paris correspondent that an agreement has been signed to release the Paris fund. Messrs. Dillon, Davitt and Harrington will award jointly the old claims not in excess of 14,000 pounds and Messrs. Dillon and Davitt will award the remainder.

Duluth elevators contain much more wheat than ever at this season of the year, and if receipts continue liberal for a few weeks more they will be full to the brim. Their total capacity is about 20,000,000 bushels.

Seymour Gilbert, of Lanesboro, Fillmore county, has made with his own hands over two hundred paper knives of as many varieties of wood, which he desires to exhibit in Minnesota's collection at the world's fair.

T. B. Walker is erecting saw mills at Crow Wing Lake, in the midst of the immense pine region bordering Crow Wing and Leech lakes. The mills will cost $100,000 and are expected to be ready for operation in the early spring.

State Auditor Bierman has compiled his annual report. The estimates for the years 1893, 1894 and 1895 are: Receipts—1893, $3,321,078.53; 1894, $2,782,188.07; 1895, $2,881,138.07. Disbursements—1893, $2,701,940.43; 1894, $2,196,000; 1895, $2,347,000.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Minnesota Iron company, in Chicago, it was resolved to build a line of road from a point between Duluth and Two Harbors in a northwesterly direction straight into the heart of the Mesaba iron district.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

St. Hilaire.

Your correspondent had the pleasure of spending a couple of hours in this little city on the river the other day, while he was waiting for the train to run out to the suburbor village of Red Lake Falls.

By the way St. Hilaire is quite a railroad center now sending out tri-weekly passenger trains to Crookston, Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls, etc.

We spent a half hour in Prof. Gombell's high school. He is a XX teacher and all the papas and mamas of the saintly city say so.

A Scandinavian Methodist conference held forth here last week greatly to the delight of their brethern. Your correspondent met Presiding Elder Knutson, of St. Paul, on the train who had just concluded the conference.

Business seemed to be good in the stores and a general exhibit of thrift and progress showed up everywhere.

TRAVELER

Valley.

VALLEY, P. O., Dec. 20th, 1892.

Special correspondence to JOURNAL.

Our people are enjoying the pleasant winter weather hugely.

The crops were very good in this neighborhood but the low price of wheat makes many of our farmers dubious, but oats, barley and potatoes, (of which latter we had an abundant crop) help out wonderfully.

The social event of the season was the marriage of our fellow-townsman, Iver A Krohn to Miss. Annie C. Renne, which occurred at the Rindal church, on Saturday, December 17th, the Rev. Lunde afficiating. A sumptuous dinner was served at the residence of the bride's parents, about 70 guests participating. Many and valuable presents attest the popularity of the happy couple, and may their skies ever remain bright is the wish of their hosts of friends and JUNO.

Ada Index—A certain person in this thriving and lively little city of ours walked into the Index office the other evening, and took into his own care and keeping our Bible, a book that was prized very highly, not alone for its long association with the Index and its affairs, but as a relic of the early days in Ada. That book belonged to Fred Puhler, and was used by him during the Nelson-Kindred campaign. We emphatically insist upon having the book returned, and will agree to buy the person returning it a new Bible.

Order to Show Cause on Filing Petition to Sell Land.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss In Probate Court, Special Term, December 15th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Peter G. Alsson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. P. Sandberg, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of, the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof, the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of the real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court on Monday the 16th day of January 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston, in said county, then and there, to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 15th day of December, A. D. 1892.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss

In the matter of the estate of H. A. Wyand, insolvent. At Crookston, Minn., December 13th, 1892, it appearing to the court by satisfactory proof and the files in the above entitled matter that Charles E. Sawyer has duly entered upon the discharge of his trust as receiver of said insolvent estate, and has filed his bond herein as required by law;

Now on the application of A. A. Miller attorney for said receiver, it is ordered that all persons whomsoever having claims against the said H. A. Wyand existing on the 10th day of October, 1892, present the same duly verified, with the proof thereof, to said Charles E. Sawyer, at the First National Bank of Crookston, Crookston, Minn., on or before the 15th day of January, 1893, for allowance.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, issued out of and under the seal of the District Court, in and for the county of Polk, and state of Minnesota, upon a judgment rendered and docketed in the said court on the 31st day of December, 1886, in an action wherein Johnson & Marshall are plaintiffs, and Joseph Grover and Mary Grover are defendants, in favor of the said plaintiffs and against the said defendants, for the sum of one hundred and sixty two and 50-100 dollars, which execution was directed and delivered to me as sheriff in and for the said county of Polk, I have this 14th day of December A. D. 1892, levied upon all the right, title and interest of the said defendants Joseph Grover and Mary Grover in and to the following described real estate; to wit: Lot eight (8), in block twenty-eight (28), of Kretzchmar's addition to the village of Red Lake Falls according to the plat thereof now on record in the office of register of deeds of Polk county, Minnesota together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, and appurtenances thereto, all the above described property being situated in the village of Red Lake Falls, county of Polk and state of Minnesota.

Notice is hereby given that I the undersigned, as sheriff as aforesaid, will sell the above described real property to the highest bidder, for cash, at public auction at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on Tuesday, the 7th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, to satisfy the said execution, together with the interest and costs thereon.

Dated December 14th, 1892.

Sheriff of Polk county, Minn.
By Simon Paul, Deputy.

CHAS. E. BOUGHTON,
Attorney for plaintiff. 136-421

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

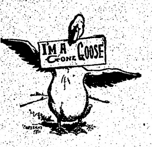
I'm a Gone Goose!



THIS IS THE CRY OF

COMPETITORS,

But don't stop to bewail the unfortunate goose when we are offering boy's three-piece silk mixed suits for $4.00. We defy competition on these. If you added a handful of dollars to this price you would just about strike the figure ordinarily demanded. They are a positive curiosity of cheapness—a little bonanza for a quick buyer. It takes something like courage to treat prices with such scant ceremony, but we are taking the bull by the horns, and you get the benefit of it. So as to give you a chance to recover from your astonishment, we will add that we are also offering rare bargains all over the house.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Fire at Dalton, Otter Tail county, did damage to the extent of $10,000.

The postoffice at Canby has been transferred to the presidential class.

A national bank has been organized at Good Thunder, Blue Earth county.

George Peters, the murderer of Editor Seward, of Stillwater, has been declared insane.

During the past eighteen months 181 money order offices have been established in Minnesota.

Winslow & Kellogg, general merchants of New York Mills, Otter Tail county, have failed for $15,000.

The miscellaneous earnings of the Minnesota state prison for the month of November amounted to $4,053.50.

The Minnesota Iron company will build a railway from Lake Superior to the heart of the Mesaba iron district.

Mrs. Joseph Bolcom, aged 91 years, died last week at Winona. She had been a resident of that city for nearly forty years.

The East Grand Forks schools, which have been closed several weeks owing to the prevalence of diphtheria, have been reopened.

John Reiserwell, a well known young man of Dexter, committed suicide by hanging. Disappointment in love is supposed to be the cause.

The first of the damage suits against the City of St. Paul growing out of the West Side flood of Aug. 8 last, has been decided against the city.

The Nonotuck Silk company and Schwab Bros.' notion house, two St. Paul jobbing concerns, were damaged by fire last week to the extent of $100,000.

Seven hundred and sixty-two saddles of venison were shipped from Park Rapids station during this season. Between five and six hundred of these were Indian killed.

Mrs. Annie Murphy, who recently worked two St. Cloud banks for $800 and $700 respectively, has been arrested at Huntsville, Ala. She is a graduate of the St. Cloud normal school.

Herman Pohlman, who was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary at Stillwater for killing a man named Tang at Center City, a little more than a year ago, has been pardoned by Governor Merriam.

The prospect is not very encouraging for the work of surveys in the northern part of the state, owing, according to the reports of the surveyor general's department, to the insufficiency of appropriations.

Colonel B. F. Smith and A. F. Thompson, two prominent citizens of Blue Earth county, died last week at Mankato. Both had been identified with the interests of the county for over thirty years.

Mrs. Anna M. Smith, the colored woman charged with the murder of August Hoppe in a suburb of St. Paul, while he was trespassing on ground belonging to a man for whom she was acting as housekeeper, was convicted of manslaughter in the third degree.

A Kentucky distilling company has obtained a thirty days' option on the plant of the South Minneapolis Distillery company, and negotiations are on for the purchase of the plant with the purpose of starting it up again. It was built about four years ago, but a year or so ago it was closed and the company went into insolvency.

The November reports of the state prison and reformatory, which were submitted to the state board of corrections and charities, show that there are now 447 adult convicts in the state. This shows a remarkably small increase in crime for this state during the past three years. In 1889 there were 448 convicts of this class; in 1893, 446, and in 1891, 445.

About five weeks ago negotiations were entered into between the officers of the Phoenix Manufacturing company, and those of the Great Western Electric and Supply company, of Chicago, for the removal to Duluth of the latter's electrical machinery and supply manufacturing plant, and the adaptation of the old Iron Bay plant to the needs of the new industry. The new company will be capitalized at $1,200,000, and it will be the most important industry at the head of the lakes. The company now employs 400 men, and will increase the number to over 500 as soon as the scene of activity is transferred to Duluth.

The Northern Lights played to a poor business last week. Some way they did not seem to catch on, though there were some very good actors in the troop, but the first three nights they did very poor work. The balance of the time their work was better especially in "Nugget Nell." Harry Ellis, as "Herbert Stanton," did excellent work (he's always good) while in the title role Miss Ellsworth was charming, as she always is. Nellie Howard took the part of "Abigail Greenleaf" to perfection. She is extremely good in comedy. "Ling Ling, the Chinaman, was taken by Miss St. Arnaud to perfection. She was better in that than any other work she did. E. R. Whelan sustained the character of "Mike Moore" right well—he did good work all through the week. "Michael Strogoff," as portrayed by this company does not seem to be better than it has been presented here before same, only in the parts sustained by the two war correspondents which, in our opinion never has been beaten on our stage, "Michael Strogoff," and "Martha Strogoff" were admirably presented. The villian in the week's work was atrocious whenever he attempted villany but, when cast in a different character showed that there is good work in him—but as a doubly-dyed villian he will never cause thousands to weep and shudder at his blood-curdling deeds—he is too good-natured and besides morally, intellectually nor physically is he calculated to be a villain.

Poisoned by Scrofula.

Is the sad story of many lives made miserable through no fault of their own. Srofula is more especially than any other a hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Arising from impure and insufficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, which are composed of white tissues; there is a period of foetal life when the whole body consists of white tissues, and therefore the unborn child is especially susceptible to this dreadful disease. But there is a remedy for scrofula, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by its powerful effect on the blood, expels all trace of the disease gives to the vital fluid the quality and color of health. If you decide to take Hood's Saraparilla do not accept any substitute.

Special.

Although all old theatre goers recognize and hail with delight a revival of Tobin's beautiful comedy, "The Honeymoon," still the near approach of Carolyn Gage and her splendid company at the Grand we may venture to recall the main features of that delightful production. The scenes are laid in Spain about the 16th century and consequently require the costumes of that period, rich in laces, satins and velvets, when each gallant vied with the other to outshine at court. The principal role is that of Juliana, a proud unbending virgin, with a decided will of her own, who weds a Duke and decides to ride over him like a violent termagant. Here the fun commences, for the Duke takes her to a miserable hovel; and assumes the garb and disguise of a peasant, and by coercion, makes her work, rub and scrub. The Duke's servant arrays himself in his master's robes and sits in the justice hall, when Juliana appeals for a divorce. The mock Duke compels her to return to work for her lord and he, in turn makes love to his own wife, and after breaking her temper conciliates her. Then there is Rolando, the woman hater, who has forsworn all womankind, and yet is captured by a woman who disguises herself as a boy and follows him to the war. The village doctor who is compelled to take his own pills and the Count Maltalban who makes fruitless love attired as a priest. The silly Lopez who tries to talk and never can finish a sentence, and the giddy old portrait painter who is hampered by the hostess of the village inn. The stately minuet and the rustic country dances all whirling, bubbling, laughing in the makeup of the finest old comedy on the English stage. Those who like a huge laugh without vulgarity, should not fail to see Miss Carolyn Gage in "The Honeymoon."

The Cheapest Literary Magazine in the World.—The January number of The New Peterson places the successor of an old-time magazine in the front rank of literary periodicals. The list of contributors contains over fifty names of the most popular authors in the country, such as Edward Everett Hale, Thos. Wentworth Higginson, Amelie Rives Chandler, Minot J. Savage, R. H. Davis, Joseph Kirkland, John Vance Cheney, Gertrude Atherton, etc. This opening number is an artistic gem from the dainty cover to the last page of the contents. It is profusely illustrated in a very superior manner, and the paper typography are exquisite. Among the leading articles are: "The Court of Last Resort," by Octave Thanet; "Philadelphia, a Comparative Study," by Talcott Williams; "The Christmas Mail," by M. G. McClelland; "Lucindy," by the author of "Pard"; "The Evolution of the Fireside," by Minot J. Savage; "A Grumble," by R. H. Davis; and poems by Florence Earle Coates, Charles W. Coleman, Madeline S. Bridges, and others of leading poets. The price, two dollars a year is simply phenomenal. The New Peterson is a positively unique undertaking, and its success is insured from the outset. Address The Peterson Magazine Company, Philadelphia.

The Advertising.

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla is always within the bounds of reason because it is true; it always appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people because it is true; and it is always fully substantiated by endorsements which, in the financial world would be accepted without a moment's hesitation.

For a general family cathartic we confidently recommend Hood's pills.

"The Winter of Our Discontent."

"Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer by this sun of York," said Richard Third. The crafty hunchback king spoke in metaphor—or Shakespeare spoke so for him—but it is not hard to apply the words to actual things. "The winter of our discontent"—for some are discontented with the winters in this latitude—may be "made glorious summer by the sun of" California or Florida. To reach these charming portions of our country, the people of the Northwest generally prefer the trains of the Burlington route, the great scenic Mississippi river line, with its sumptuous Pullman sleepers, elegant reclining chair cars (seats free,) peerless dining cars, and the choice of routes which it gives by running over its own tracks direct to Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City. If the balmy climate of California or the south attracts you this winter, secure tickets via the Burlington route from your home ticket agent, or write for any information as to rates and routes to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

CHAPTER V.

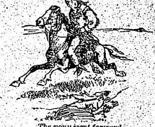
Let us follow Joe as he leaves the rocky breastworks and creeps forward in the darkness.

The Indian never leaves his dead in the hands of an enemy if it can be avoided. It is not chivalry which induces him to peril his life to remove a dead body, but superstition. As soon as night fell preparations were made to secure the dead scattered on the slope. Half of the bodies had been removed when Joe made his start.

There was but one chance of his working through the lines, and he was taking it. Before he had crept twenty feet he found himself beside the body of a warrior, as he hoped and expected to. He seized it by the arm and began pulling it toward the gully. When half the distance had been accomplished he was joined by a warrior who came up from behind and seized the other arm and said:

"I thought it was my brother, but he must be farther up."

Joe uttered a grunt in reply, and the two dragged the body to the brink of the gulf. There other hands received it, and as it was lifted down to be borne away for burial Joe passed along with the three or four warriors in charge. No one seemed to give him particular notice. There were only a few Indians in the gully, the main force having withdrawn temporarily farther to the north.



The pony went forward.

As Joe followed the body down the gully he met several Indians coming up to help remove the dead, but he had not gone over two hundred feet when a break in the right bank offered him an opportunity to leave the big ditch. He scrambled out at once and dropped to his hands and knees and crawled away in the darkness.

He had passed the gully, which had been considered the great point of danger, and now to get the lay of the ground about him and seek to discover if there was another circle of Indians! Creeping forward as silently as a rabbit he ascended a ridge from which he could make observations.

The Indians were carrying off their dead—a portion of them—while the others had built fires behind another ridge and were cooking their meat. They seemed assured that the white men would make no move to assume the offensive, and the repulse had evidently demoralized them for the time being.

The way to the north and the west was unobstructed so far as the scout could determine in the darkness, and after a bit he moved forward, having no other object in view than to cover the twenty miles between him and the forks of the Cheyenne as soon as possible. He was carefully picking his way to the northwest, neglecting no precaution until he should be certain that he was beyond the lines, when he suddenly came upon a dozen or more Indian ponies bunched in a hollow where the dampness had brought forth a growth of sweet grass. Two or three were hobbled, but the rest were free, and after creeping clear around the circle Joe failed to find a guard. If one had been left he had temporarily abandoned his post.

The Indian's horse and dog are like the Indian himself. They hate the white man. Although Joe's disguise had carried him through the Indians his scent betrayed him to the horses at once, and as he crept nearer, those which were unfettered moved away. The scout knew the characteristics of the animals, and he lost no time. From a heap of saddles, blankets and lariats he seized a rawhide rope and made a dash for one of the hobbled ponies, making off as fast as his situation would permit. In a couple of minutes he got the rope around the pony's neck and looped it into his mouth and then he had him. It was not more than five minutes work to cast off the hobbles and arrange blanket and saddle, and then he led the animal out of the hollow and over the ridge and away into the darkness until he felt safe in mounting him. The beast fought hard for a few minutes, knowing that it was all wrong, but the strong arms and the hard heels of the scout finally humbled him, and he went off through the darkness at a gait which would have distanced pursuit had it been attempted.

Up one ridge—down the other side—up and down—never a change in the lay of the ground for miles and miles, but holding as straight for the forks as the needle of the compass could point.

Hunters in the woods have their signs and need no compass. The hunters and scouts on the plains seem to divine by intuition. To the average eye the great plains are a trackless waste. To the scout they are an open book. Blindfold him and lead him in circles for an hour, and when the hoodwink is removed he will give the compass points without hesitation.

And an Indian has the instincts of a fish or wild animal. The panther or wolf may be driven from his lair and pursued for miles, but he can return to it [illegible] Indian blindfolded a hundred miles from any familiar point and turn him loose and his eyes will instinctively turn in the direction of home.

As Joe rode forward through the gloom of night he had no fear that he would come out above or below the forks. His only anxiety was that he might fail in finding the party. Suppose it had pushed ahead faster than he had figured! Suppose it was still two or three days away! Suppose the order to set out had been countermanded!

The pony went forward through the darkness at a steady gait, seeming never to tire, and after midnight the character of the country began to change. Instinct told the scout that he was approaching the forks. If the party were there there would be a score of signs to show it before coming within rifle range. At the distance of a mile away Joe pulled his horse down to a walk and thus went forward, listening with bated breath for some sound to locate the camp.

The soft footsteps of his horse alone broke the mighty silence. Not so much as the chirp of a cricket came to him from out the darkness.

When yet half a mile from the forks Joe's heart sank within him. If there was a camp near at hand his horse should make some sign. The Indian's dog and pony are his sentinels as he sleeps.

There was a grove of cottonwoods at the forks, and around and about was grass in plenty. It was the spot for a camp, but there was no camp. The scout advanced at a steady walk until he reached the edge of the grove unchallenged. That settled it. The party had not arrived. He almost cried out in his disappointment, and for the next few minutes he knew not what to do.

"They may have passed here no longer ago than noon," he finally argued with himself, "or they may be only half a day's march to the east. I must wait for daylight to determine."

He had no fear of Indians here. Every redskin for fifty miles around had been called in to make up the force now besieging the train. The pony was watered and staked out, and then the scout penetrated the grove a short distance and flung himself down to sleep. In ten minutes he was sleeping like a child. Therein lies the secret of the endurance of the plainmen. They drill themselves in sleeping. No opportunity to sleep for even a quarter of an hour is ever neglected. In Custer's battles with the red men his scouts slept in the deep snow with the thermometer at zero while waiting for daylight and the opening of the battle of Wichita.

Nothing occurred to create an alarm or disturb the scout's slumbers, and with the first signs of dawn he was on his feet. A quarter of an hour later he was beating back and forth for signs of the white party. Ten minutes' search satisfied him. It had not passed. No one, white or red, had passed the forks within three days. Joe had no food, and as his rifle had been left behind the prospect of procuring fresh meat was anything but encouraging. Anxiety offsets hunger, however.

At the east end of the grove was a tall cottonwood standing alone. Joe mounted to its very top to make an observation. The country to the northeast was rolling, with timber along the course of the river, but after scanning the country as closely as possible the scout descended with the conviction that no considerable body of men was within twenty miles of him. Had the party from Fort Sully been within fifteen miles of him he could have detected the smoke of their morning campfires.

Should he wait? No! His impatience was too great. He had left the beleaguered wagon train feeling that the fate of every man depended upon finding the soldiers at the forks. It had been a long, long night to the men crouched down behind the breastworks and expecting an attack at any moment. Had an attack been made? Had they been strong enough to repel it? If not, the morning sun was looking upon their disfigured corpses. If so, the horrors of thirst were creeping in upon the defenders to madden and disorganize them. Every mouthful of meat and bread would but add to their torments. Every hour would render the heroes more desperate.

And every man left behind was depending on the energy of the scout, whose nerve had carried him out of the fort to save the party from the horrible fate which seemed in store for them. Joe realized this, and taking a deep draft of the cold waters of the Cheyenne he caught up his horse and mounted and held for the west, keeping the right hand bank of the river and pushing the gait as fast as he dared. He had begun to believe that no party had left Fort Sully, but he was riding furiously forward in that desperation which makes men cling to straws in midocean.

Chess in Japan.

Not only are there a great number of pieces and moves in Japanese chess, but their value changes; for instance, on reaching the enemy's camp promotion ensues and captured pieces are re-entered under various conditions. In fact, the game demands, if that were possible, more undivided attention than European chess, and in its provisions and contingencies, especially the last, is strictly military.

The pieces, agreeable to the enrolling of prisoners, are all of one color. Chess has always held considerable position in Japan. It flourished during the shogunate and again after the revolution is being revived. A grand tourney was held not very long ago at Tokio.—London Spectator.

Utilizing Wire Fences.

An ingenious landowner at Melbourne has applied the wire fences in his district to telephonic use. By utilizing the top wire [illegible] extensive estates are connected. Mr. Edward [illegible], the manager, carries an instrument in his buggy, and by [illegible] wire at any point can communicate with either homestead.—London [illegible]

Always Equal to the Emergency.

No sooner does a man wish for something in the Railroad line than the Northern Pacific Railroad is on hand to furnish it. This time it is Canadian Winter Excursions. Upon November 29th, December 6th and any day from December 13th to 22nd, and again on December 27th, any man or woman in North Dakota or Northern Minnesota can buy a round trip ticket to Montreal, good for 90 days, for only $40.

Any person living in Manitoba can do the same thing, on any day from November 28th to December 31st. By payment of very reasonable amounts extra, other trips can be added to this, and tickets extended. In addition to all this, the Northern Pacific will, in connection with the Wisconsin Central, run through Pullman Tourist Sleeping cars, on November 29th, December 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th, to connect with a special train, which will leave St. Paul upon arrival of Northern Pacific train in the morning, and run through to Chicago, by daylight, arriving there in time to connect with all trains for Canadian points leaving there that night.

This special train is for the sole pleasure and accommodation of the Canadian Winter Excursionists, has a parlor car attached, and the charge for berth in sleeping car and seat in parlor car to Chicago is only $2.00. This practically gives the Canadian Winter Tourist the earth, only he doesn't get it fenced in. By buying these winter excursion tickets, you get a fine opportunity to visit the world's fair grounds and buildings, and see what a wonderful place it is there. All information, maps, tickets etc., can be obtained of any agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, by either writing or calling personally.

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.
GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.
Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.
GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

MORTGAGE SALE

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and forty-two and fifty hundreths dollars, ($542 50) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by James Strader and Mary A. Strader his wife, mortgagors, to John R. Hare, mortgagee bearing date the first day of November, A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the first day of November A. D. 1883, at 3:35 o'clock p.m., in book N of mortgages, on page 227, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lot eight (8) in block five (5) in Clements' First Addition to the original townsite (now city) of Crookston according to the plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county in Polk county and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the fourteenth day of January A. D. 1893, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at anytime within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st A. D. 1892.

IS PASSING AWAY.

LIFE OF JAMES G. BLAINE TREMBLING IN THE BALANCE.

He Has a Sinking Spell from Which He Was with Difficulty Revived—It Is Now Admitted by All That He Is in a Very Critical Condition — Latest Reports from Physicians Say that He Is Slightly Better.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—All day Mr. Blaine hovered very close to the line separating life from death, and it was realized that if any further complication set in there was little if any hope for him. His condition, it is true, has shown a slight improvement, but hardly such as to give grounds for any real hope.

Mr. Blaine may live for some days. He may live for an even longer period. The disease from which he is suffering is such that a week is not a long period in its progress, but he will never again be a well man. He may die at any time. The physicians themselves admit that it is impossible to predict what changes may occur. Little change for the better is to be hoped for. All the members of the Blaine family are now here. Mr. James G. Blaine, Jr., and Miss Hattie Blaine were both summoned home, and Mrs. Emmons Blaine, the widow of Mr. Blaine's son, has also joined the household. It is understood that they all realize Mr. Blaine's condition.

"Mr. Blaine maintains the hold he secured during the morning, when his condition showed a slight improvement," was the reply of Dr. W. W. Johnston, Mr. Blaine's physician, when asked how his distinguished patient was by a United Press reporter during the evening. Dr. Hyatt, the consulting physician, who was present, concurred in the statement. They had just come from the sick room, where they had called a fifteen minutes consultation.

"Mr. Blaine is still in full possession of his faculties," continued Dr. Johnston, "and while very weak he is nevertheless as cheerful after the trying ordeal as could be expected. It is impossible to state how long Mr. Blaine is likely to survive. Speculation on such a subject would simply be idle nonsense. I do not think Mr. Blaine is in any danger of dying during the night. Further than that I do not care to state."

A friend of the family stated that Mr. Blaine is liable to a recurrent attack of heart failure at any moment, and that the family have been warned to prepare for the worst when it comes.

"When," said the gentleman, "the physicians state that Mr. Blaine is better, they simply mean that he is alive, and that is about the true statement of his condition. Cordials of a stimulative nature and other liquid nourishment are given him at frequent intervals, and these are what are keeping him alive. He lies helpless on his bed and cannot change his position without the aid of his attendants. Mr. Blaine may not live twelve hours and he may survive three or four days, but I doubt it."

Dr. Loomis Talks.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—Dr. Alfred L. Loomis has returned to this city from Washington where he has been to see Mr. Blaine. To a reporter he said "Mr. Blaine is in a very critical condition, yet he cannot be said to be in any immediate danger. He is a very sick man and may die at any moment or he may live for weeks. It is impossible to tell anything more definite about his case at present." A special to the World from Augusta, Me., says it is known there that Blaine suffered an attact similar to Sunday's one week ago. His friends in Augusta are disheartned and fear they will not see him again in life. One of Mr. Blaine's relatives says that Mr. Blaine has been losing strength ever since he apparently recovered from his illness two years ago.

ROBBED THE MAILS.

Well-Known Postoffice Employe Under Arrest at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—Federal officers have placed under arrest a well-known postoffice employe, a man of good family and heretofore above suspicion, on a charge of robbing the United States mail. They have recovered $800 that was stolen between Peoria, Ill., and La Crosse, Wis., several weeks ago, and believe this to be but a small portion of the amount taken. The prisoner was taken before United States Commissioner Hoyne and committed in default of bonds of $10,000 to await trial, but owing to probable fatal sickness in the man's family the government authorities desire to suppress the name for the present. A full confession is in the hands of the department, and the stolen money was found buried where the prisoner told the officials he had hidden it.

Dismissed the Case.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The important case of Henry Leicester, plaintiff in error, vs. The Board of Harbor Line Commissioners, state of Washington, involving harbor rights of great present and immense prospective value along the water front of Seattle, was dismissed by the United States supreme court for want of jurisdiction.

Offers a $10,000 Purse.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—The Olympic club of New Orleans has offered a purse of $10,000 for a fight between Alex. Greggains and Young Mitchell, the event to come off April 1 to 8. Young Mitchell has accepted the offer, but Greggains has not yet been heard from.

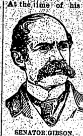
Used a Dynamite Bomb.

CHEROKEE, Ia., Dec. 20.—An attempt to blow up the Zion parsonage, occupied by Elder John Patterson and family, was made at 2 o'clock a. m. A dynamite bomb tore the church into fragments and shattered the windows. A son of the pastor has been active in enforcing the prohibition law.

SENATOR GIBSON DEAD.

After a Long Illness the Louisiana Statesman Passes Quietly Away.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Dec. 16.—After a lingering but apparently painless illness Senator R. L. Gibson died at 8:10 p. m. At the time of his death he was surrounded by the members of his family and several close friends, who wept bitterly when it was seen that the noble-hearted man was dead. Senator Gibson passed away as though he had merely gone to sleep. There was no struggle, no suffering. He had been confined to his bed since the 12th of November, since which time his death has been expected daily.



SENATOR GIBSON.

SENATOR GIBSON'S FUNERAL.

It Took Place at 11 a. m. in Lexington, Ky.

LEXINGTON, Dec. 19.—The remains of Senator Gibson arrived here at 6 o'clock Sunday afternoon. They were removed to the residence of Colonel Hart Gusson on the Harrodsburg pike, just beyond the city limits, from where they were taken to St. Paul's Catholic church at 11 o'clock this morning, where the funeral services took place. The delegation appointed by congress to be present at the burial and pay the last respects of that body to Senator Gibson arrived Sunday night and registered at the Phœnix hotel. A number of friends from New Orleans and elsewhere were also here.

OFFICIAL COUNTS.

Wisconsin.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 16.—The state board of canvassers has completed their canvas. The official vote for president is: Cleveland, 177,436, Harrison, 170,761. The pluralities of the Democratic state nominees are: Peck, for governor, 7,598; Jones, for lieutenant governor, 6,763; Cunningham, for secretary of state, 7,384; Hunner, for for treasurer, 8,082; O'Connor, for attorney general, 7,703; Willis, for state superintendent, 6,297; Thompson, for railroad commissioner, 7,227; Roef, for insurance commissioner, 7,318. Peck's total vote was 117,098, being the greatest ever given any candidate in Wisconsin. The total Prohibition vote is 13,185, and Labor 9,638. The constitutional amendment requiring city charters to be in form was ratified by a majority of 6,618.

New York.

ALBANY, Dec. 16.—The vote of the state of New York on electors—the vote given being the highest received by any one elector on the respective tickets—is as follows: Democratic, 654,908; Republican, 609,459; Prohibition, 38,193; Socialistic Labor, 17,918; People's, 16,430. The vote shows that the plurality of the highest Democrat over the highest Republican elector is 45,449.

Idaho.

BOISE CITY, Ida., Dec. 16.—The official count for Idaho has been completed by the secretary of state as follows: Weaver, 10,480; Harrison, 8,799; McConnell (Rep.) for governor has 1,409 plurality.

South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, Dec. 16.—The official vote of South Carolina in the recent election for president is as follows: Cleveland, 54,698; Harrison, 13,384; Weaver, 2,410; Bidwell, none.

South Dakota.

PIERRE, S. D., Dec. 16.—The official vote of South Dakota is: Harrison, 34,888; Cleveland, 9,081; Weaver, 26,512. Bidwell had no votes.

Nebraska.

OMAHA, Dec. 16.—The official vote of Nebraska: Harrison, 87,218; Weaver, 83,134; Cleveland, 24,943.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS

Executive Committee of the National Association Meets at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The executive committee of the National Association of Democtatic clubs held a meeting at the Ebbitt House during the day. With a view to continuing the work begun in the Northwest last year the committee decided to authorize the appointment of a sub-committee to take charge of the "especial" work in those states and territories. Hon. William L. Wilson was appointed chairman of the sub-committee with power to appoint his associates. Much of the success of the late election is attributed to the formation of clubs. The president, secretary and chairman of the executive committee were instructed to prepare an address to the public, setting forth the aims and objects of the association.

Republican Steering Committee.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—A meeting of the Republican senators' steering committee was held during the day for the purpose of hearing statements from the Western senators, whose seats are likely to be contested by Democrats, as to the condition of affairs in their respective states. Among those who spoke were Senators Felton of California, Casey of North Dakota, and Warren of Wyoming. Each of these gentlemen went into details of the situation during and since the late election. It is said that they came to the conclusion that the steering committee, at present at least, can be of no particular assistance to them. There were no representatives from Kansas and Nebraska.

Death in Senator Kyle's Family.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Dec. 20.—United States Senator J. H. Kyle is expected home from Washington, having been summoned Saturday on account of the fatal illness of his youngest child.

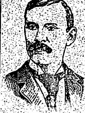
Continues to Improve.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—General Rosecrans's condition continues to improve visibly. He goes about his room and appears to have regained his normal health. [illegible]

A BIG WORLD'S FAIR HOTEL.

It Is Designed as the Temporary Home of Christian Endeavorers.

Hotel Endeavor is a taking title, and the hotel so named will certainly be a delightful place if the plans of the promoters are carried out. It is to be finished by April 1, 1893, and is to occupy a large square on the lake shore just south of Seventy-fifth street, Chicago, and therefore but six blocks from Jackson park and very "contagious," as Mrs. Partington said, to the exposition grounds. It is to be in the form of a vast quadrangle, with open court in the center, and every one of the 700 rooms is to be both an inside and an outside room, with sunshine on one side all the time, and an equally good view of outside world and inside court.



C. B. HOLDREGE.

This hotel is the project of the Society of Christian Endeavor, which now has about 1,400,000 members in the United States, and its principal projector is Charles B. Holdrege, president of the Illinois State union of the Endeavor societies. At a meeting of the union last summer the question was asked, What special preparation should be made for the comfort of the associates who will visit the exposition from all parts of the world? By common consent it was agreed that a hotel specially designed for Christian people was the proper thing, and Mr. Holdrege went to work on the scheme at once.

He soon had the needed $100,000 subscribed, and Jonathan Clark, owner of the land, leased it on favorable conditions. The contractor expects to have the hotel under roof by New Year's, and agrees to forfeit $100 a day if it is not completed by April 1. On the east side the hotel fronts on the lake, and the porch there will be pleasant indeed. The 700 rooms are to accommodate a thousand guests if necessary, and all Christian Endeavor people who get their names registered before the fair opens will be entitled to rooms at a dollar a day. Thereafter transients must pay two dollars a day each. No liquor or cigars will be sold in the hotel, but there will be plenty of material for jollity, and no one need get homesick or weary. Mr. Holdrege is secretary of the directory and the active business man. The other officers are C. M. Hotchkin, president; Fleming H. Revell and Edwin D. Wheelock, vice presidents; James R. Chapman, treasurer; W. D. Marsh, auditor, and J. Wilson Howell, counsel.

A Female Candidate for Laureate.

The suggestion that Jean Ingelow be appointed poet laureate seems to have been taken quite seriously by the English. It comes when the rights of women are occasioning considerable discussion, even in parliament. One member of that body—Sir Wilfred Lawson—emphatically insists that women are perfectly able to take their places alongside the men in intellectual pursuits and professions.

"Why should not women be bishops?" hotly contended Sir Wilfred, which, strangely enough, arouses the ire of some of the stanchest woman's rights advocates. They are seemingly afraid that Lawson's remarks may be really a delicate piece of sarcasm, as he is known as a funny man in parliament. Say the ladies, "Sir Wilfred Lawson may have met a bishop here and there who was something of an old woman, but it does not follow that all old women would make good bishops."

A Paragraph About Poetry.

Poetry is but a form of music, and music, as one of the oldest proverbs puts it, is the language of passion. The conclusion would therefore seem to be that as the nation advances in culture and as its music grows sweeter and more delicately sweet and expressive its poetry would as steadily improve. Nevertheless the critics tell us that the earlier poets of each people have gained and held the first place, and in "Rasselas" Dr. Johnson makes Imlac balance the arguments on this subject in language so beautiful that though prose in form it is in fact both music and poetry.

A Hotel Man Who Is Popular.

In one of the big western cities of the United States the proprietor makes it a point to see that delicate attention is paid to guests by means of the liberal use of flowers. When a man and wife arrive and are ushered into the most cheerless of habitations, a hotel bedroom, the desolation is soon relieved by a bell boy coming with a basket of flowers, which, he says, "Mr. ——, the manager of the house sends to Mrs. Blank, with his compliments."

Women as Typewriters.

Census statistics reveal some startling facts about the number of women who earn a living as typewriters. In the limited space between Worth street and the Battery, New York, where there are many large wholesale houses, it is stated that 15,000 women are employed as typewriters. A single typewriting machine company finds employment through its various offices for 10,000 women a year.

The French Tax on Bicycles.

The new tax upon bicycles in France is two dollars. As there are about 225,000 cyclists the revenue will be about $450,000. Cycles used for business, such as those employed by street messengers, pay half duty. Those in the army and the government service will be exempt. The cyclists, as a rule, do not object to the tax, for the reason that they expect some special legislation in return.

Catarrh, Heart Failure, Paralysis of the Throat

"I Thank God and Hood's Sarsaparilla for Perfect Health."

"Gentlemen: For the benefit of suffering humanity I wish to state a few facts: For several years I have suffered from catarrh and heart failure, getting so bad I could not work and

Could Scarcely Walk

I had a very bad spell of paralysis of the throat some time ago. My throat seemed closed and I could not swallow. The doctors said it was caused by heart failure, and gave medicine, which I took according to directions, but it did not seem to do me any good. My wife urged me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, telling me of Mr. Joseph C. Smith, who had been

At Death's Door

but was entirely cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. After talking with Mr. Smith, I concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. When I had taken two bottles I felt very much better. I have continued taking it, and am now feeling excellent. I thank God, and and my wife for my restoration to perfect health." HARVEY HEED, Laceyville, O.

If you want to purchase a half section of land, all under cultivation, at a great bargain call and see us. We know of such a place within two miles of the city limits that can be had cheap, as the owner wishes to put the proceeds into other business. One hundred acres of the land was broken last year. Good buildings, good well and good fences on the place. One of the best farms for a stock farm we know of in this vicinity. It is a bargain, [30, tf]

All for Five Cents.

A steam knife grindery is one of the odd concerns of the French quarter. The main business of the place is the sharpening of tools, and the manufacture of the small instrument with which screw threads are cut, but you may step in, hand out your pocketknife to be ground, and have the satisfaction of seeing a 4-horsepower steam engine started to perform a service at the price of five cents.—New York Sun.

Canadian Excursions.

Excursion tickets to Canada will be on sale via St. Paul and "The North-Western Line," to Chicago at offices of the Great Northern Ry., from points in Minnesota and Dakota north of and including Crookston and Grand Forks on November 29th, December 6th, 13th to 22d, inclusive, and on the 27th, and from points in Manitoba daily from Nov. 28th to Dec. 31, inclusive.

To Montreal and points west in Quebec and Ontario, but not to points north of Gravenhurst and west of Carleton Jct., the rate will be $40.00 for the round trip.

Tickets will be good for return passage 90 days from date of sale, subject to extension of time on additional payment.

The Montana and Manitoba Express trains of the Great Northern Ry. arrive in St. Paul in the morning in time to connect with the "North-Western Line" fast day train leaving St. Paul at 8 a. m., arriving in Chicago 9:35 p. m., making connections with late night trains out of Chicago to the East.

Passengers arriving at St. Paul in the morning, desiring to stay over until evening, can take the "North-Western Limited" on this line that leaves St. Paul at 8:10 a. m., and arrives Chicago 9:30 o'clock next morning. On this train are the magnificent compartment sleepers and Buffet-Smoking and Library cars.

Buy your tickets over the "North-Western Line." It is also the only line running a train to St. Paul every morning both week days and Sundays to Milwaukee and Chicago.

ORDER TO EXAMINE ACCOUNTS.

STATE OF MINNESOTA. County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, December 6th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of George Dumas, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Fred Benoit, administrator of the estate of George Dumas deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law:

It is ordered, That said account be examined, and petition heard, by this Court, on Tuesday the 3rd day of January A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County.

And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 6th day of December, A. D. 1892.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Dec. 1st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars ($300.00) which became due January 1st, 1892, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Robert J. Montague, mortgagee, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1891, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1891, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book 49 of mortgages, on page 417, and the said Robert J. Montague having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and there is now justly due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of one thousand thirty-seven dollars ($1,037), and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section thirty-one (31), in township one hundred and fifty (150), of Range forty-six (46), excepting therefrom the west three hundred feet which is platted into lots, and the railroad right of way of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company; also excepting that portion lying on the northeast side of said railroad and within five hundred feet of the centre line of Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to Crookston, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 14th day of January, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said morgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st, A. D. 1892.

When looking for a Christmas present, go to the Fair department store. An endless quantity of holiday goods to select from.

Mrs. J. M. Palmer and Miss Campian, of Angus, were visiting friends in the city last week, returning on Monday morning.

W. E. Slocum received a dispatch on Tuesday announcing the death of an uncle at Charles City, Iowa, which occurred on Monday.

Wm. Erdman has completed the brick-work at the jail and the finishing process is being pushed as fast as the carpenters can do it this weather.

Ira D. Blanchard returned last week from a seven months sojourn in Minneapolis and Duluth. Finds many changes in the city during his absence.

Dr. M. Leguee was called to Tabor on Saturday to attend to some very sick horses. He left them on the high road to recovery on Sunday morning.

Robert Teal and family, of Euclid, left last week for a visit to the old home in Canada. Charles Teal left on Tuesday of this week for the same purpose.

Dave Miller, of Angus, went through the city with six teams last week, enroute for Bagley's camp to work in the woods for the balance of the winter.

S. L. Collins weighed a load of fish brought in from Maple Lake by a Mr. Langden, last week. There were just 2500 pounds of fish. Fish must bite pretty well up that way this winter.

At a chattel mortgage sale in the city last week a pair of steers and a cow were sold at figures that show that there is money in stock. In days that are past we have seen stock sold at one-half the figures these brought at forced sale.

Geo. W. Peake left for his new home at Minneapolis on Sunday evening which reminds us that it is customary, on such occasions to say something about what is one city's loss is another's gain, but hanged if we dare venture for fear of getting mixed up.

Fontaine & Anglim's iron-grey pony took a whirl all by himself on Friday and after racing about the streets a few minutes returned to the store uninjured with only his harness and the cutter thills left. He had distributed the robe, cushion and cutter promiscuously about town.

H. A. Mason has sold out to Lynne & Berg and will go to Battle Creek, Mich., sometime in January. Herb is one of the old timers, has seen the city grow from an infant to its present proportions and few there are who will not regret to see Herb go away from us. The JOURNAL wishes him abundant success in his new home.

SOME of the boys are worrying over the words of Donnelly wherein he declares that he will bid farewell to politics and climb a tree. Never you mind Donnelly. No need to worry over him as he no doubt only intends to play the Cincinnatus act until the next election, so that when the call to office comes he can quit the plow tail and respond with alacrity. You bet he's dead in it!

Ed. Chapin came over from Devils Lake on Sunday evening and will visit a week in the city the guest of engineer, Tom Hunt. Ed. has just got up from a siege with typhoid fever and is most as fat as a match, but with an appetite onto him like unto an escaped Andersonville prisoner. He is doing nicely and will soon be able to resume his duties as fireman on the road.

Fire broke out in Dainiard Bros. meat market on Wednesday evening of last week but was subdued before extensive damage was done.

Judge Mills performed his last official duties in Polk county last Saturday and left Sunday evening for Ada, where he held court Monday, and this closed his labors as Judge of this district.

A load of fish from the Rosseau county was on our streets on Tuesday. There was no evidence of their having been caught with a hook or speared and the presumption is that they were taken with a net.

W. A. Norcross, a Crookston oldtimer is in the city this week interested in a land suit. W. A. is a resident of Detroit in Becker county. He says our city is improving wonderfully and is bound to be an important city in the near future.

Earnest Rolsch received from a taxidermist in Minneapolis a large moosehead, a screech owl, a sandpiper and a squirrel which he added to his already fine collection. About January 1st he expects a handsome snowy owl which he sent down not long since.

Policeman Dave Robinson tells the JOURNAL of a singular runaway that occurred on Monday evening. A horse attached to a light driving cutter started from South Crookston and when near the planing mill took the railroad track and crossed the new railroad bridge; cutter and all. How the horse ever missed falling between the ties is a mystery but the fact remains that he did.

Ed. Berg, who has been engaged in Erickson's confectionary store, has formed a partnership with P. E. Lynne, the Robert street photographer, and the firm has purchased Herb Mason's stock of goods and will continue the business at the old stand. Mr. Berg will have charge of the store and it is safe to say he will make a success of it, as his engagement at Erickson's has given him a large acquaintance with the patrons of their business.

A. J. Stoeser, who purchased the Commercial hotel property some time ago, has purchased the furniture and fixtures in the hotel from Mr. Clark, and will hereafter conduct the house himself. Mr. Stoeser will probably retain the present help in the hotel, including the efficient and accommodating day clerk, "Alvy" Newland and the suave night clerk, Mr Liebig. Mr. E. L. Clark, the retiring landlord, has not yet decided what he will do, but will remain in the city for a few weeks. Mr. Stoeser is already remodeling the office, the dining room and kitchen.

Another serious accident occurred at Nelson, near Alexandria in Douglas county, on the Great Northern road on Sunday morning by which eight men were killed and five seriously injured. There had been a collision there on Friday morning and a number of cars were wrecked and the wreck train had been employed in clearing the track. Having finished the work the train was being made ready to pull out, when a freight train dashed round a curve and ran into the caboose, smashing it to kindling-wood killing eight men and wounding five men.

At the close of the performance on Saturday evening Eben Lancaster was chosen by the audience to draw the lucky number from the hat, but when Eben got upon the stage and was blind-folded he weakened, and being struck with stage fright made the first and best impromptu speech of his life. He said: "Ladies and gentlemen, in view of the fact that this company has been playing in hard luck this week I move you that we suspend the rules and don't draw on them for this $20. I have not been asked to do this but am only speaking out the promptings of my own generous nature." The motion was quickly seconded by a dozen or more in the audience and carried almost unanimously as it was well known that the company had made nothing.

Col. S. S. Statsvold of Fosston is attending court this week.

Commissioner Johnson attended the last meeting of the board.

Geo. McLean has accepted a position in the county auditor's office.

O. L. Larson, the Fosston merchant, was in the city Wednesday.

Miss Susie McFate left for her old home in Canada on Tuesday night.

Ed. Martin, who has been so long with Charlie Misner has accepted a position with A. Dufresne.

Frank Farnham, of Grafton, N. D., has accepted a position in Misner's baber shop. Frank is said to be a sick man with a razor.

Sam Wallace: No, I'm not kicking about the hard times. My receipts for the present month up to date are $180 more than for the same time last year.

Mrs. Cora Underhill leaves for a visit to Ohio next week. She will doubtless remain until the World's Fair opens and visit that concern ere she returns.

The board of county commissioners met Tuesday, and finished their labors Wednesday adjourning sine die. The work of the board consisted principally of cleaning up unfinished business and allowing bills.

Attorney Chas. E. Boughton, of Red Lake Falls, was in the city on Tuesday and gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call. Mr. B. is a new man in Polk County having come to the Falls last summer but seems to be made of the stuff that succeeds.

L. J. Columbus has been fortunate enough to secure Carolyn Gage, as a special holiday attraction for three nights, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 28th, it is hoped this attraction will draw a little more patronage than did the one last week. Prices, 75, 50 and 25 cents.

Mrs. J. W. Barnhart met with a serious accident on Tuesday night, the result of an over-turned lamp which ignited everything in the vicinity and set fire to her clothing. A neighbor hearing her screams ran to her assistance and succeeded in smothering the flames but not before the lady was badly burned.

The people of Crookston appreciate a good thing. They never fail to give McClary, of St. Paul, a full house. He comes Tuesday night, Dec. 27, in a new lecture which is taking the northwest by storm, "The Mission of Mirth." All his old friends will be delighted to greet him again and he will be make many new ones. Hear him Tuesday night at the M. E. Church.

Mrs. S. W. Vance has been appointed a member of the committee to collect war relics for the World's Fair. If any of our readers have any old bits of shell picked up on the battlefield or any interesting relic he will confer a favor by calling on S. W. Vance at the 1st National bank who will, if the relic be such as is needed take it and guaranty its safe return to the owner after it has served its purpose.

Judge C. M. Benson met with a singular accident on Monday morning that will lay him up for awhile. He had just finished milking his cow, when a cat jumped upon the manger and the cow made a dash at the cat striking the Judge's left wrist and breaking several bones. The Judge has given notice that no Probate court business can be attended to for at least two weeks.

Hoch & Moeckel opened their new restaurant and lunch counter on Monday evening. They have rigged up three elegant little stalls with a table in each, have a wash-room conveniently arranged, have their cooking done up stairs and have secured the services of a first-class cook and are now ready for business. Being near the Great Northern depot (just across the way from it) they naturally expect a big transient trade and they are fully prepared for everything that comes.

The convention of Christian endeavor societies held in the congregational church of our city last week Friday and Saturday was a pleasant and successful meeting. Several papers were read on vital subjects and inspiring discussions followed. State president of Minneapolis was present helping in his own genial musical manner and remained over Sunday evening before the mass meeting in the interests of Christian Endeavor. Also state secretary, Miss Carrie Holbrook of St. Paul was present giving two addresses and rendering valuable aid. This was an inter-denominational convention. The workers present proceeded to form a new union to be known as "The Crookston District Union of Christian Endeavor." The district includes the counties of Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Norman and Beltrami. Mrs. C. R. Andrews of Ada is president and Miss Helen Davies of Angus, secretary of the union.

A New York Village Scorched.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 27.—The village of Wyoming, in Wyoming county, was visited by the most severe fire in its history during the morning. Before its course could be stayed it had burned the Methodist Episcopal church, six stores, seven dwellings and three barns. Nine families are left homeless. Loss $100,000, almost entirely covered by insurance.

No One Seriously Injured.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27.—A collision occurred at Pencoyd station, a short distance from this city, on the main line of the Reading railroad, about 1:30 p. m., which resulted in the injuring of an engineer, fireman and several passengers. None of whom, however, were seriously hurt.

Failed to Find a Missing Brother.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—John Regan, who is said to have been an honorary pall bearer at Parnell's funeral, committed suicide in this city during the day by firing a bullet into his temple. Inability to find a missing brother, heir to the family property in Dublin, is the supposed cause.

MR. BLAINE'S CONDITION.

The Distinguished Ex-Secretary Getting Along Nicely.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—"Mr. Blaine is getting along nicely," was Dr. Johnston's reply to the question as to the condition of Mr. Blaine's health. When asked as to the probability of Mr. Blaine's removal in the near future, Dr. Johnston's reply was that such a contingency was too remote to be discussed at present. Mr. Blaine was doing very well, and it was his condition each day that concerned him rather than what his movements might be one week or one month hence.

Little Martena Doing Well.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—Little Martena Harrison, the president's 5-year-old granddaughter, who was taken ill with scarletina Friday last, is reported at the White House as being as well as could be expected. The disease is well under control and there is every indication of a favorable termination. The other children of the household have so far escaped the disease and are now believed to be entirely beyond danger of contagion.

THE THIRD BLIZZARD.

Kansas People Experience All the Rigors of a Northern Winter.

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 27.—All the rigors of a Northern winter are being experienced by the residents of Kansas. The third blizzard of the season set in Monday afternoon, accompanied by the most intense cold thus far experienced this winter, the thermometer here at 10 o'clock showing as many degrees below zero. Long delays to railroad traffic and heavy losses of stock are the chief results. Snow plows are kept busy on the Rock Island and Santa Fe roads. Four trains on the latter line are blocked in by the snow drifts between Dodge City and Cimarron, and the Rock Island has two trains in the Northwestern district in the snow.

NO CAUSE FOR DISCHARGE.

Members of Labor Organizations Reinstated by a Georgia Judge.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 26.—Judge Speer of the federal court has rendered a decision in the case of the striking telegraph operators on the Central railway against the receiver. Judge Speer said that the fact that a man was a member of a labor organization was no reason for his discharge. On the motion of the strikers asking the court to reinstate them in their positions, Judge Speer decided in their favor, so far as to order the receiver to replace all the men except those whose positions had been already filled.

Father McGlynn May Come West.

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn, who was last week restored to his priestly functions through the medium of Mgr. Satolli, will in all probability be under the jurisdiction of either Cardinal Gibbons in the Baltimore diocese or Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul. There is little likelihood that the restored priest will ever be stationed again in his old diocese, and according to a prominent ecclesiastical friend of Dr. McGlynn, he has the choice of the above two dioceses under consideration.

General William T. Sherman was familiarly called "Uncle Billy" by his soldiers, and also "Old Tecumseh."

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Mr. Sands, wife of Conductor Casper Sands, died at her residence in this city on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, of a tumor in the neck. She has been a great sufferer for about a year and had been to St. Paul to consult a specialist for the purpose of having it removed, but its location was such that the operation would be sure to cause her death, so she was brought back home again to die, but contrary to all expectation she began to improve, got so that she could partake of solid food and the prospects were favorable for her ultimate recovery, but it seems that the strain had been too great for the enfeebled system and she could not rally and died of heart failure or exhaustion. She leaves four children, a husband and hosts of friends to mourn her loss.

Standing hitched to a post by the sidewalk on Main street in front of the Fair one day last week was a handsome pair of chestnut horses, impatiently champing their bits showing that they had the life in them. "There," said a bystander, "is as fine a team as can be found in all Polk county, and as fine as any man need care to draw lines over. They belong to Uncle Bob Cochrane, who has a fine farm up near the Gentilly bridge and who is making money every year—some way or other. I have often wondered how he does it, when I have heard men grumble and say there is no money in farming, but I know that he makes money somehow. His farm lies rolling, enabling him to get his grain all in before the flat lands can be touched—maybe that is the entire secret but then Uncle Bob don't depend on wheat alone. See that team? Well, go to his farm and you will see all his horses looking as well, you will see plenty of cattle cows, sheep, hogs and poultry all showing just as good care and I shouldn't wonder if that fact had SOMETHING to do with his success. I used to know the old man down in Wabasha county. He was always just as particular in his methods and while he did not make as much money there as here no slipshod methods would do for him at all and I have concluded that method in farming will pay as great a percentage as in any other business."

"I have been looking in my JOURNAL for sometime for an explanation of the meaning of all that digging now going on on the Greenhalgh farm near my place," said Chris. Houston to the JOURNAL man on Tuesday. Hunting up Jas. Greenhalgh Sr. we boned him for the key to the situation and were told that himself and his boys were now engaged in cutting a canal across a narrow neck about a quarter of a mile north of the old gentleman's farm house, which canal was to furnish water-power for a flouring-mill that they intend to build up there next summer. Said the old gentleman: "For a long time I have had an idea that there is big money in a flouring-mill if cheap power is used and economy exercised and I have always known the power I can get cheaply but have so far been prevented demonstrating my ideas owing to the legal battles I have had with the railroad and with Walker. I have now got those matters settled in my favor and am free to carry out and demonstrate my plans. I expect to complete my race this winter and next spring will build my mill. Shall put in a complete roller mill and use it for custom work. I have an idea that I can do better by the farmers than has deen done in some instances, at any rate I mean to demonstrate whether I can or not. You will see a good mill go in up there in the spring my boy. Watch it.

A. J. Goodwin, one of the leading farmers of the Marais was in the city on Wednesday and made the JOURNAL office a pleasant call. Mr. Moore has a fine farm about two miles from Mallory and makes a success of his business and as the JOURNAL always likes to get the experience of successful farmers we plied the reportorial pump freely. Mr. Moore said that he thought the idea that any man can be a successful farmer was erroneous—that his conclusion was that to be a successful farmer one must come nearer to knowing everything than in any other pursuit. It is not so much of a trick to raise a crop as to know what kind of a crop to raise and how to market it, and this requires ability of no mean order. A farmer requires to know what kind of crops his soil is best adaped to, also what kind of stock to keep as well as when it pays best to be well supplied with cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, and when he should be short on these things and long on grains, and what kinds. He must constantly watch the markets and be able to forecast, as what is a good thing for one season may not be for another and the margin is so close that a farmer can not afford to make many mistakes. Again, a farmer must manage to keep employed all the year around. He thinks stock will help out the prairie farmer in this particular. Thinking, as a rule, winter dairying the most profitable employment in the business, but one must be fitted up for it and must produce a good sample of butter and then, and only then will it pay. Says he has six cows, grade Holstein, feeds them millet hay and for rations a candy-pail full of ground oats, barley and bran mixed one-third each morning and evening. Says it costs no more to do things in the right way than it does to do it in the wrong way, and the difference in the methods is all the difference in profit and loss. Says he gets ten cents per pound above the market price for his butter and can find a ready market. Says every day or so a butcher comes along and pays him $20 clear cash for a fat hog and that helps out a good bit. Said he: "I am not as much of a farmer as I would like to be but I have learned that it requires constant study to make a success and I try to keep posted fully and believe that what little success I have attained I owe to that fact."

Christmas Tree Exercises.

The Christmas tree exercises at the Methodist church Monday night proved a very enjoyable entertainment.

The seating capacity of the Sunday school room was tested to its utmost by the large crowd of members and friends of the Sunday school, and all were very satisfactorily entertained by the program rendered, which consisted of singing, responsive readings and recitations by several of the scholars, all of which were well done and some pieces exceptionally fine.

At the close of the program the curtain rose and disclosed to the view of the delighted audience two elegantly decorated trees heavily laden with tokens of remembrance for the members of the school.

Santa Claus had not quite completed his preparations when the curtain arose, but was observed to be very diligently engaged filling candy boxes for the children, from which occupation he was soon aroused, and though evidently in a very exhausted and enfeebled condition from his recent arduous labors and venerable age, managed to express his pleasure at again meeting the children on a Christmas occasion, in a few eloquent and well chosen remarks, after which the tokens and gifts for the children were distributed and the exercises closed.

During the dismantling of the trees the decorations caught fire from the candles several times, but Fireman Kyle who was assisting in the work very promptly and gallantly tackled the threatening flames and put his feet on them—and the result need not be stated. Suffice it to say the fire disappeared.

A Sad Christmas.

Mr. and Mrs. Nick Funk, of Barnesville, came up last Saturday to spend Christmas with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. August Walters and found Mr. Walters suffering with a hard cold which brought on a relapse and ended his life on Monday afternoon. Mr. Walters was about the house nearly all day Sunday but did not leave his bed on Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Funk remained to the funeral which took place to-day.

A Nice Christmas Present.

"It is a little girl," said J. W. Wheeler to our reporter on Tuesday morning, "arrived at our house last evening. Regulation weight and all doing nicely."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Fosston

(Delayed Regular Correspondence.)

Thirty below zero Monday morning.

D. A. Ray rejoices over the arrival of an heir.

Mayor Hilligoss has moved into his new residence.

Wood is being marketed and shipped in large quantities.

The extension of this branch of the Great Northern through the Leech Lake country the coming season seems to be an assured fact.

The numerous transients to and from the lumber camps keep one hotel taxed to their full capacity to furnish accomodations.

Miss Flora Haley closed a very successful term of school four miles west of town and visited our village schools several days the past week.

Farmer Geo. McManus and his brother Will tarried several days in in our midst the fore part of the week. The former talked a little insurance on the side, while the latter related his experience while traveling in Mexico.

No sooner had the eagle eye of mine host Suttor spied the gallant form of Major John Buckingham after returning from his pine claim in the Red Lake country, then he immediately placed him in his former position, behind the counter at the Commercial. The major's extensive experience in that capacity peculiarly befits him for the position and the girls say he is a lulu.

Euclid Items.

Weather fine and everybody in the best of spirits.

John Stuhr came over from Red Lake Falls to spend Christmas with his parents.

H. C. Misner took in your city and Grand Forks last week on a business trip.

Mr. L. S. Hancock's family held a reunion on Christmas.

Mrs. P. Fairweather returned from a prolonged visit to Minneapolis and St. Paul on Saturday.

Those wishing to have points of law expounded to them, can do so by calling on M. P. Losey, who has lately returned from the juror's bench.

The people of Euclid and vicinity celebrated Christmas in right royal style by rendering a very nicely arranged literary program at the Presbyterian church.

Harold and Carl Misner invited their little friends to see their Christmas trees.

Those who attended the dance given by mine host John Hanson at the Keystone house, report having a grand good time.

Rumor has it that one of our fair damsels is about to enter into the holy bonds of matrimony in the near future. If such is true it is our sincere wish that they may have "Fairweather" during life's journey.

"Old Hickory," otherwise known as C. Teal, Sr., has gone to Canada on a visit.

The Euclid glee club went to Argyle Thursday to take part in the Demorest contest program.

When you see H. C. Misner ask him the time of day.

Miss Gertie Melott has been visiting for a few days in the family of M. E. Kirsch of your city.

M. Losey, Jr., spent Christmas with the old folks.

Clyde and Gracie Chapin of Warren are visiting friends here during the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Davidson took a run down to Lockhart to see their son and daughter. They bring back word that little Johnnie is in good health and eating three square meals a day.

The Euclid correspondent wishes all a happy and prosperous new year.

Miss Mattie Piatt is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. N. Piatt. Miss Piatt is from Montreal, Canada, and is on her way to Seattle, Washington, where (it is said) she is to meet her future hubby.

Our genial express agent, E. B. Ballou, is kept rustling these days with Christmas boxes.

Fosston Thirteen Towns:—Nate Butler, of Barnesville, and Gardner Stephens, of Minneapolis, arrived on Tuesday with a crew of Great Northern surveyers, but owing to the fact that their camping outfit was in some manner left in Crookston they were obliged to remain here until this morning. They are bound for Turtle Lake, a point about 40 miles east of here, and will from there run a line to Park Rapids, but whether the object of the company in running the line is for the purpose of building a branch, or merely to get an accurate description of the country they have no knowledge, but think it is the latter. They have just completed the survey from Lake of the woods to Thief River Falls, but do not think that the company has the slightest intention of building a line in this direction, but merely to obtain a clear idea as to the condition of the country, as they were obliged to investigate a strip of country 18 miles wide, which would have been unnecessary if the building of a line was the object. Mr. Butler will only remain with the crew until they are started with the work, and will then return, while Mr. Stephens will have charge of the party in the field, and expects that it will take nearly the entire winter to finish the work. Mr. Stephens is well known in this country having formerly resided at Crookston and was at one time a candidate for auditor on the democratic ticket, and came near capturing the office of register of the land office there on the death of Wm. Smith, but was defeated by the underhanded work of the democrats there, for whom he still has the kindest remembrance. He is a brother-in-law of Mayor Winston, of Minneapolis, one of the big democratic guns of the state, and the probable candidate of the party for governor in the next campaign.

Origin of "Lynch Law."

Webster's Dictionary, title "Lynch law," says: "The practice of punishing men for crimes or offenses by private, unauthorized persons, without a legal trial. The term is said to be derived from a Virginia farmer named Lynch, who thus took the law into his own hands." These are the main facts in regard to the origin of this celebrated "law," which, as a matter of fact, is not "law" at all.

In Campbell county, Va., some of the rankest and most obnoxious Tories were taken care of by law, but there were many others not reachable by the statutory enactment. This being the case, Colonel Charles Lynch, Colonel Robert Anderson, his brother-in-law, and one Calloway, a neighbor, determined to rid their part of the county of its enemies. They accordingly seized the leaders of the several Tory factions and flogged them so severely that they were only too glad of the chance offered them to "leave, and leave for good."

This "summary" treatment having proved so effectual in Campbell county, it was soon tried in other counties where King George had the strongest following. Such procedures soon became known as "trials by Judge Lynch," and the "justice" obtained in such courts as "Lynch law."—St. Louis Republic.

Universality of the Sign Language.

It is a fact worth noting that the signs used by the Indians of North America are identical in may instances with those employed by the deaf mutes of today. A short time ago a friend of the writer, who had spent considerable time among the Indians, but who had never talked with a deaf mute before, conversed with some pupils of the New York institution by means of signs which he had learned from the red men. "Where are you going?" and "I am going away on horseback," were the same when given by the deaf mutes and by the visitor.

Another instance showing the sign language to be a universal one was when the mother of the writer, herself a deaf person, while attending a convention of instructors of the deaf in France, conversed on various topics with a mute friend by means of signs. The French lady had no knowledge of the English language, while the American knew hardly a word of French.—Scribner's.

Why They Wouldn't Cash It.

A well known broker presented one of John Jacob Astor's checks at a down town bank the other day and was surprised beyond measure when the paying teller refused to cash it, remarking with a significant smile: "That man's checks are no good here. He gives us more trouble than all our depositors put together. We won't touch it."

"What!" exclaimed the broker, "won't cash that check? Why, man alive, d'ye know who Mr. Astor is? Great"——

"Hold on," interposed the teller; "the check isn't signed. We get 'em that way every day. They are the most troublesome of all our depos"— But the broker had fled.—New York Times.

A Clergyman Cobbler.

An old fashioned Yorkshire Baptist preached every Sunday for fifty years, and repaired shoes throughout the week. The good man, who knew his Bible by heart, studied Jonathan Edwards, Matthew Henry and Dwight, and paid his way. Some of his brethren sneered, and respectable persons turned up their noses at his leather apron, but the common people heard the old man so gladly that he did more real good than did many a pulpit thumper attired in the bravery of gown and bands. He was one who knew how to make the best of both worlds, and at his death left his widow a house and money in the bank.—National Review.

Lane's Medicine Moves the Bowels Each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of the state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

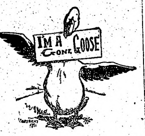
I'm a Gone Goose!



THIS IS THE CRY OF

COMPETITORS,

But don't stop to bewail the unfortunate goose when we are offering boy's three-piece silk mixed suits for $4.00. We defy competition on these. If you added a handful of dollars to this price you would just about strike the figure ordinarily demanded. They are a positive curiosity of cheapness—a little bonanza for a quick buyer. It takes something like courage to treat prices with such scant ceremony, but we are taking the bull by the horns, and you get the benefit of it. So as to give you a chance to recover from your astonishment, we will add that we are also offering rare bargains all over the house.

TO SEE CLEVELAND

SPEAKER CRISP WILL MAKE A TRIP TO NEW YORK.

The Object of His Visit Said to Be to Consult With Mr. Cleveland Regarding Committees—There May Be a General Shaking Up—Prospect of a Lively Time.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 27.—A special to The Pioneer Press from Washington says: Speaker Crisp will start for New York during the day, and whatever else may be assigned as the motive for his visit his chief reason for going is to see President-elect Cleveland. He has been much disturbed of late by the stories which have come to him of opposition to his re-election as speaker, and he has been alarmed more than all else at the position which friends of Mr. Cleveland at times have represented that gentleman as taking. Mr. Cleveland's frequently expressed admiration of W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, indicates him as the man to lead the movement against Crisp, and the latter, when he sees the president-elect, will not only discuss the question of an extra session of congress, but will endeavor to find out just what he has to expect in the way of opposition from the incoming administration. Mr. Crisp recognizes that the policy of Mr. Springer, the present chairman of the ways and means committee, of "reforming" the tariff by specific bills has been very unsatisfactory to Cleveland and his friends in the house, and that their support of Mr. Wilson, who is a radical tariff reformer, is based more on Mr. Crisp's chairman of the ways and means committee than on personal hostility to the speaker himself.

Willing to Depose Springer.

It is understood that Speaker Crisp is willing to entirely reorganize that committee, placing Mr. Wilson at the head, and associating with him any gentleman Mr. Cleveland may select, so that the framing of a new tariff bill can be accomplished in a committee which is in thorough harmony with Mr. Cleveland's views.

There is only one trouble with this programme. McMillin and Catchings, of the rules, (practically the steering committee) Springer, chairman of the ways and means, and Holman, of the appropriations, "go into the air" when they hear that Crisp is promising to organize the house after the Cleveland idea. All of these alleged leaders except Catchings when they elected him, and they do not propose to be thrown over at the dictates of Cleveland. They are determined that Crisp shall show his hand before they support him for re-election. They had promises before they supported Crisp, and they intend to have them again. If a deal is made with Cleveland leaving out these leaders and others in prominent places under the speaker and putting in tried and true Cleveland men instead of them, the crowd that is on top now will be ready to fight.

Made a Deal with Crisp

ORDERED TO COUNT

A Writ of Mandamus for Box Elder, Mon., Election Canvassers

HELENA, Mont., Dec. 24.—In the supreme court, Chief Justice Blake handed down an oral decision granting the motion made by Wade for Leech, relator, for a peremptory writ to compel the Choteau county canvassing board to canvass the vote for Box Elder precinct, and the court ordered that the writ be issued, compelling the board to meet and count the vote in said precinct. The decision on the issues of the case will be handed down Tuesday or Wednesday.

ALL FOR WEAVER.

A Decision Which Gives Populists Three North Dakota Electors.

BISMARCK, N. D., Dec. 27.—Judge Rose has decided the famous Selz precinct controversy case against the board of canvassers who refused to canvass the returns. It is held that the board has no judicial authority and must simply canvass all returns on their face. This gives the Fusionists all three electors from North Dakota.

AFTER MURDERERS.

Two Illinois Toughs Narrowly Escape Lynching at Vandalia.

VANDALIA, Ills., Dec. 27.—John and Bill Kimbro, brothers, from Bond county, came to Vandalia and after filling upon whisky started to take in the town. They flourished knives and assaulted several citizens on the main street. They finally came upon Township Collector De Land, who was getting shaved in a barber shop, and assaulted him, cutting him in the right side, the blade penetrating the liver. The men made their escape, but were arrested shortly afterwards by Sheriff Steinhaur and posse near town and brought back and locked up. It was with extreme difficulty the assassins were spared from hanging by a mob.

In Front of a Locomotive.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—Patrick Mahoney and J. H. Barnett, while crossing the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railway tracks at Seventieth street in a hack were run down by a passenger train. Both men were terribly mangled and died within half an hour of each other at Mercy hospital during the morning.

Casey Goes Home.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—Senator Casey has gone to North Dakota to look after his senatorial fences. He expects to meet with opposition, as he has already been informed that several anxious aspirants are reaching for the place.

Commander Folger Resigns.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Commander William M. Folger has resigned his position as chief of the naval ordnance department on account of ill health. The resignation takes effect Jan. 3 next.

SHIP CANAL CONVENTION.

Secretary Thompson of the Duluth Chamber of Commerce Issues a Call.

DULUTH, Dec. 24.—As the result of correspondence with a large number of commercial and municipal organizations in various parts of the country Secretary Thompson, of the Duluth chamber of commerce, has issued a call for a national ship canal convention to be held in Washington Jan. 12, 1893. The importance of the movement is briefly set forth in the call, the conclusion of which is as follows:

Makeup of the Convention.

All commercial associations, including industrial unions and farmers' organizations, and also all incorporated municipalities, are invited to appoint each five delegates to this convention. The governor of each state will be invited by special communication to attend the convention and to appoint five citizens of his state as delegates at large. The real question to be considered is whether the time has not come when the declaration of political independence, made by our forefathers more than a century ago, should not be supplemented by a declaration of commercial independence of Canadian routes of transportation. This question is it is national. It is hoped, therefore, that this may be the largest and most influential commercial convention ever held in the United States, and that it may result in securing the needed legislation at the present session of congress. To this end the press is earnestly requested to give the matter the widest possible publicity, and all organizations entitled to representation under the call are urged to appoint delegates without awaiting receipt of a formal invitation.

Neither Local, Sectional Nor Partisan;

THE MARSHALS DEFEATED

Battle Between Mexican Revolutionists and United States Officers.

NEUVA LAREDO, Mexico, Dec. 26.—The Mexican revolutionists have committed another bold outrage on United States soil. A lengthy dispatch was received here from Guerrero, stating that reliable information had just reached there of an engagement in Sparta county, Texas, between a posse of United States marshals and about 300 revolutionists, which resulted in the defeat of the marshals and the capture of two of the latter, who are being held as prisoners by the outlaws.

Last Wednesday this posse of marshals under the leadership of Pink Barnhill, captured Julian Pacios, one of the leaders of the recent revolutionary movement, and started back to their camp with him Wednesday night. Just before daylight Friday morning, the camp of the deputy marshals was attacked by about 300 well armed and equipped revolutionists. The deputy marshals made a desperate resistance, but were overpowered and compelled to make a retreat. The revolutionists released Pacios and captured two of the deputy marshals who remained behind the remainder of the posse in the fight.

WORK OF DYNAMITERS.

A Detective Office in Dublin Wrecked by an Explosion.

DUBLIN, Dec. 26.—An explosion occurred Saturday night outside of the detective office in Exchange court. Detective Synnott, who was passing at the time, was killed. The scene of the explosion is near Dublin castle, near the city hall. Detective Synnott, when found, lay prostrate, his face mangled, an arm and leg shattered and seriously wounded on the chest. He was taken to the Jarvis street hospital, where his injured limbs were amputated. He lay unconscious for about twenty minutes, then died. The walls of the detective office were cracked by the force of the explosion and all of the windows and frames were broken. At the spot where the infernal machine exploded the flagging of the courtyard was torn up for several feet and a great hole excavated in the earth.

A Trial of the Vesuvius.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—The navy department has mapped out a most exhaustive trial for the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius and her guns. The trial will take place at Port Royal, S. C., about Jan. 15. She will be ready to leave the New york navy yard on Dec. 28. The trial will be conducted under the auspices of a board appointed by Secretary Tracy, consisting of Captain Montgomery Sieard, commanding the Miantonomah; Captain A. S. Barker, commanding the Philadelphia, and Commander W. H. Brownson, commanding the Dolphin.

Army Indian Agents.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—By direction of the president, under the act of 1892, and Sec. 2062 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Captain Charles Porter, of the Eighth infantry, and First Lieutenant Leonard A. Lovering, of the Fourth infantry, are designated to perform the duties of Indian agents, the former at La Pointe agency at Ashland, Wis., and the latter at the Sisseton and Wahpeton agency, South Dakota.

Laid Off Six Hundred Men.

ANACONDA, Mon., Dec. 27.—The Anaconda Mining company has laid off 600 men, the entire force that had been working in the Anaconda and St. Lawrence mines at Butte. No more ore will be shipped to the smelter at Anaconda for about thirty days. Marcus Daly said that the copper market had nothing to do with the suspension.

Head of the Economites Dead.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 26.—Jacob Henrici, senior trustee of the Economite society, of Economy, Pa., is dead, aged 88 years. The society of which Father Henrici was leader is composed of about 500 people, are all celibates and are worth between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000. They make up the town of Economy, about six miles west of Pittsburg.

Mrs. Langtry Much Worse.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—Mrs. Lillie Langtry, whose condition was reported Sunday as having favorably passed the critical point, has suffered a serious relapse.

SPREADING RAILS.

SANTA FE PASSENGER WRECKED NEAR COLORADO SPRINGS.

The Coaches Hurled Down a Fifty-foot Embankment—Two Boys Fatally Injured and Many Others Less Seriously Hurt.

DENVER, Dec. 24.—The train on the Santa Fe road which left here at 11:30 p. m. was wrecked at Prinn station, sixteen miles north of Colorado Springs, at 2 a. m. The train was derailed about two miles east of Halstead, while running at a high rate of speed. The passenger coaches and Pullman sleepers were hurled down an embankment fifty feet high, and landed in a heap at the bottom. The overturned cars and it was the greatest difficulty the imprisoned passengers were rescued from a frightful death. It is stated that two unknown boys, said to reside in Denver, were fatally injured. A number of passengers and several of the train crew were reported injured, but no one was killed. A relief train with physicians and surgeons was sent from Colorado Springs and rendered assistance and relief to the injured. The accident is attributed to spreading rails.

Immediately Caught Fire,

FEARFUL EXPERIENCE.

Marvelous Escape of an Iowa Man on an Illinois Railroad.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Charles Griggs, a drug clerk, was taken to his home in Keokuk, Ia., suffering from the terrific nervous shock of a record-breaking hair-breadth escape. He was struck by the Milwaukee limited train on the Northwestern road, traveling at the rate of forty-five miles an hour, and carried six miles on the pilot of the locomotive in an unconscious condition. Though black and blue with bruises not a bone in his body was broken. Mr. Griggs was crossing the Northwestern track at Wilson avenue when the limited whirled in sight simultaneously with a suburban passenger train going rapidly in an opposite direction. Griggs was bewildered. There was no time to leap clear of the rails. With only the hope of delaying impending death, Griggs jumped straight into the air. He was struck by the front of the engine and dropped half stunned on the pilot, his hands instinctively clutching the braces.

He was not found until the train reached South Evanston. He does not remember anything from the time he jumped until found. Although not a bone was fractured or even wrenched, his recovery is considered doubtful.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.

Over Four Thousand Miles Built During the Past Twelve Months.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 23.—Statistics of railway construction during 1892 will be the subject of an article in an issue of The Railway Age. It shows that during the twelve months the total length of main track laid in the United States was 4,062 miles, on 289 lines, in 43 of the states and territories. This is about 400 miles less than the total in 1891. The only states in which no track was laid are Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware and Nevada. The total railway mileage of the United States is now 174,663 miles. The states in which the greatest mileage was laid during the present year are as follows: Washington, 420.73 miles; Pennsylvania, 256.94; New York, 236.32; Michigan, 220.64; Texas, 211.23; West Virginia, 203.94; Minnesota, 200.27; Ohio, 197.15; Missouri, 197.13.

MERRYMAKERS DROWNED.

Ten Lives Lost by the Capsizing of a Pleasure Yacht.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Dec. 27.—A sad accident occurred here during the day to a party of merrymakers, resulting in the death of ten of them. The owner of a yacht made up a party of his friends to take a sail and twenty-three persons accepted the invitation. All went well and all on board were enjoying themselves until the mouth of the harbor was reached. Here a severe squall struck the yacht and capsized it. Vessels in the vicinity succeeded in picking up thirteen persons who were struggling in the water, but ten of the party were not seen after the yacht turned over.

Detroit Fireman Killed.

DETROIT, Dec. 27.—A small fire in the saloon and grocery of J. J. Kavanagh, at 3:25 a. m., caused the death of one fireman and the serious injuring of two more. Peter D. Schwartz, Charles E. Savage and George H. Fletcher, of Company 4, began raising a ladder on the north side of the building, when a terrific explosion occurred. The heavy cornice and the chimney came down with a crash, burying Schwartz under the mass of debris. When his companions dug him out they found that he had been horribly mutilated and was quite dead.

Set His Sister's Clothes on Fire.

ELWOOD, Ind., Dec. 27.—Mrs. Millton, a widow living in the city, left her three children alone in the house for a short time while she stepped across to a neighbor's. During her absence the youngest son lit a match and set his little sister's clothes on fire. Before the mother returned the little one had been fatally burned, and died after suffering terribly for three hours. Thirty-one matches had been lit by the boy before he succeeded in setting his sister's clothes on fire.

Presented to the City.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—The magnificent Columbus fountain, the gift of John B. Drake, of the Grand Pacific hotel, to the city of Chicago, was formally turned over to the municipal authorities during the afternoon. The exercises, owing to the severity of the weather, were held in the city council chamber.

A HAPPY new year to one and all.

THE holiday edition of the Times—with its pretty cover—was a credit to the enterprise of its manager—Mr. McKenzie.

THE JOURNAL acknowledges receipt of a handsome Christmas card from F. E. Barnum, of the Sauk Centre Avalanche. Frank is an all round good fellow, whether as a reporter on a country daily or at the head of a metropolitan city weekly. The JOURNAL adds its blessing and wishes him many merry returns of the day his card memorializes.

ALTHOUGH defeated by a good majority, Mike Doran—the democratic boss—is contesting the election of D. M. Sullivan to the lower house of the Minnesota legislature. Mr. Sullivan's answer to the notice of contest, embraces several very strong allegations against Mr. Doran, the first and foremost of which being that said Doran was ineligible as a candidate because he hadn't lived in the district the required six months preceeding election. Among the other charges are irregularities in voting, and the use of money to influence voters. What Doran's object was in bringing a contest is not very clear, as there would seem to be little chance of his winning it.

THE editor of the Times takes exception to a statement in the Minneapolis Tribune to the effect that Hon. Halvor Steenerson is being strongly urged by the people of the Red River valley as a member of the board of railroad commissioners to succeed Judge Williams, and in denying this statement he refers to Mr. Steenerson's vote for the legislature in support of this denial.

What does the vote for Mr. Steenerson show? He ran 22 votes ahead of Knute Nelson in this county—the vote being 1,267 for Nelson, and 1,299 for Steenerson. In the district Mr. Steenerson got 1,976 votes, while John R. McKinnon—who had the whole democratic legislative ticket to trade off for his support—besides having the undivided support of the Times—only received 1,839 votes—thus falling behind Mr. Steenerson 137 votes. Mr. Steenerson is undeniably the strongest man—politically—in the district, outside of the populists.

If the people of this valley are pushing Mr. Steenerson for the office, they are making no mistake, provided he would be willing to accept the office. But he could not afford to give up his lucrative practice for an office of this kind, and besides this, the JOURNAL has it on good authority that he has already joined in recommending another man for the place.'

RETROSPECTIVE.

Soon we will have entered upon another year for better or for worse. The year 1892 will have gone to its niche in the halls of eternity, and we will be started on a new, untried year. Whether the new year will be as prolific to the sons and daughters of America as the one now closing is one of the things which only time can tell.

Throughout the United States the year eighteen hundred and ninety-two will be recorded as one of the most prosperous in its history. At no time has there been such general prosperity among all classes. Industry has kept pace with the growth of the country, giving remunerative employment to the toiling and needy millions; agriculture, as a rule, has been followed with good results, and the mines, the forests and the plains of this great nation have all yielded an abundance of the necessaries, the comforts and the luxuries of life.

This is speaking of the nation as a whole. Of course there are localities where there has been failures of one kind or another, times have been hard, crops poor, money scarce and business dull, but in no place has there been any necessity for actual want or privation.

Minnesota as a state has enjoyed a prosperous year, and has added largely to her population and her wealth. New industries have been started, commerce has increased, considerable railroad building has been done, and the greatest source of wealth of this state—her iron ore—has been developed to a larger extent than heretofore. The richest portion of this great and prosperous commonwealth—the northeast part, with its almost limitless forests of pine and rich deposits of mineral—is yet undeveloped, and will form a source of wealth, profit and labor for years to come.

In Polk county the crops were light owing to the unfavorable weather in the spring which delayed seeding and reduced the acreage below the minimum and the yield was also light; add to this a low price, and it will be seen that the wheat-raiser of northern Minnesota has but little remuneration for his labors this year. But the experience of this year has been unprecedented in the history of the Red River valley, and may never be repeated. A larger acreage than usual is ready for crop next year, and the indications point to an early spring, a big crop and the most prosperous year this section of the state has ever experienced.

In Crookston the year has been marked by a substantial growth—in population and building. A large amount of money has been expended by the city in street grading, and our streets are now reduced to a uniform grade. The several handsome brick blocks erected during the past summer, show a continued confidence in the future of the Queen City. The new jail which has just been completed adds another institution which has long been needed.

There is every reason to believe that the Fosston branch of the Great Northern railway will be completed to Duluth in the near future—perhaps next year—and a direct route from Crookston to the head of the Great lakes would mean a great deal for this city. The opening of the reservation is also one of the things to be looked forward to as helps to the upbuilding of the metropolis of northern Minnesota—Crookston.

COUNTY DIVISION.

The McIntosh News opens the ball on the county division question, stating that a petition is in circulation asking to have a bill introduced to have Polk county divided and (of course) to have McIntosh made the county seat. Well, we are told that Hunt, of the News, has just bought up the old Chronicle outfit and, of course he would like to have a county seat made to run it in. We learn also that Red Lake Falls is preparing to move in the matter of county division with a view to getting a county seat at that place—they have a new railroad and naturally want a county seat to go with it so that they can boom up their town and all of the town-site owners get rich while the farmer is supposed to pay the fiddler. There is yet Thief River Falls, Fosston and East Grand Forks to hear from—anxious for county seat division and all want a county seat of course—5 new counties, 5 new county seats and 5 new sets of county officers to provide for to say nothing about what would be left, called Polk county—that ought to make officers enough to satisfy even the most ambitious populist who is in it "for revenue only!" Well, now it would be a good thing, (maybe) to gratify the ambitions of all of these places to be county seats, but how can the farmers, who will have the expense to bear, stand it? Would it not be cheaper for them to pay a small hotel bill in Crookston once or twice a year than to tax themselves for the benefit of a few speculators—for that is about the only benefit that can be derived from county division. Now the JOURNAL does not care a whoop whether the county stands as it is or is divided four or five times if the majority of the farmers themselves desire it so for we are a firm believer in the principle of having the majority rule—save only for the fact that it will add largely to the taxation on the JOURNAL farm as it will to every other farm in Polk county, but, if the majority will it so, why all right, we can sell our farm and thus dodge that much of the expense attendant. The idea that a new county would start free of debt is an erroneous one as the territory set aside would have to bear it proportion of the cost already incurred in the buildings etc., in Polk county but they would also be obliged to erect new buildings of their own as well as to maintain their officials. If the plans of these county division schemers could be carried out there would be a bigger howl about taxes in a few years than, we have ever heard before—but then the ambitious villages would carry their point and real estate dealers would live in clover, and nobody but the farmers would suffer and they ought to be toughened to suffering by this time.

AN OUTSIDE OPINION.

Bismark, N. D., Tribune:—It appears the enemies of Cush. Davis are preparing to make a vicious attack upon him, as candidate for re-election to the United States senate from Minnesota. At nearly all of the conventions held in the state during the campaign, resolutions were passed or instructions given, favoring Senator Davis' re-election. The present attack upon him takes the form of an effort to prevent the members of the legislature from abiding by this expression of the party's wishes by refusing to take part in any caucus which would control their action. A lengthy circular has been prepared to be distributed among the members at the commencement of the session, denouncing the caucus system and urging them to stay away from it if one is called. It appears to be an instance of the adoption of "reform" methods for the accomplishment of an object by no means in the line of reform. The defeat of Senator Davis could gain nothing of good for Minnesota, and, as for destroying the system of party caucuses in the state it would be removing a system which is far from being wholly bad. There is no reason why the members of a party, elected to the legislature as such, should not meet and agree upon a course to be pursued by them, and consider themselves bound by the decision arrived at, whether the meeting be called a caucus or by some other name. The word has come to be, to some extent, associated with the machinery of ring politics; but it will be long before the method of management it represents, will be supplanted by any other that will be so efficient or satisfactory. It would be a misfortune to Minnesota, should over-zealous enemies of Davis, on the pretense of reforming the caucus out of existence, succeed at the same time in preventing his re-election to the senate.

A BRITISH FREE TRADE SCHEME.

New York Press:—The Philadelphia Record, one of the most vigorous and consistent supporters of Grover Cleveland, is out with "A Solid Basis of a Tariff for Revenue." The "solid basis" consists of a copy of the essential portions of the British tariff. In substance, the Record proposes a duty per pound of 1 1-2 cents on sugar, 2 cents on coffee and 5 cents on tea. In other words, it proposes to abolish the "free breakfast table" established by the republican party. It calculates that these changes would add $80,000,000, to the federal revenue, and, by inference, would enable the democratic party to make sweeping alterations in other parts of the tariff. And still some benighted democratic organs continue to assert that there is no danger of British free trade in the United States. The proposal of the Record is an indication of the manner in which the interests of workingmen are to be "conserved" during the next four years.

Milbank Advance—Quite an amusing accident was witnessed at Nassau last Saturday. As the freight pulled in, a box car and was left on the crossing while the switching was going on and a goodly flock of turkeys took advantage of the partially opened doors of the car hopped in to pick up stray kernels of wheat. The engine coupled on and the brakeman came down the line of cars looking for innocent "bums" and discovered this pack of "bums" and instead of going through the usual process of "shell out or bite the earth," he quitely closed the car door and as the train pulled out he climbed the ladder and shook his fist at the silent spectators. He got at least a dozen fat turkeys for Christmas and the smile that lighted up his soot begrimed countenance came near ditching the train. The owner of the adventurous animals says he doesn't care if the brakie doesn't charge him up for their fare.

SHOWS A BUSY YEAR.

The Annual Report of State Weighmaster Reese.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 26.—State Weighmaster C. M. Reese, in his annual report of the grain and warehouse commission, presents a number of interesting figures about the crop year ending Aug. 31, 1892. The total number of bushels of grain weighed into and out of the elevators and mills of the state was as follows:

Wheat, 110,122,762; corn, 3,738,969; oats, 7.342.425; rye, 511,752; barley, 2,840,461; flax, 2,629,200; total, 127,185,572.

The total number of cars was: Wheat, 175,982; corn, 5,778; oats, 6 884. rye, 918; barley, 4,057; flax, 4,889; feed, 5,003; total, 203,521.

To this the number of cars of hay, straw, corn, oats, coal, feed, turnips, barley, twine and timothy seed weighed in railroad yards, 2,152, should be added, making a grand total of 205,747 cars handled.

The report goes on to say that weighing is now being done at 51 points in the state, which include 25 elevators, 23 mills and 3 railroad yards. The past year has been the busiest one the department has ever had. There were 55,899 more cars weighed than ever before in one year, and the receipts over 1891 were $11,848. Out of 825,000 bushels of wheat weighed out of the St. Anthony elevator the loss was only about 30 pounds per 1,000 pounds.

A Christmas Murder.

MADELIA, Minn., Dec. 27.—Patrick Naven and Henry Guth fought in the moonlight at 10 o'clock over a trivial matter as to Christmas festivities. The men were seperated by friends, but met on the next block, where Naven whipped out a large jack knife and severed Guth's femoral artery. The latter ran ten rods and fell dead. The coroner's jury found Naven guilty of murder in the first degree.

CUTTING THE MISTLETOE.

An Ancient Druid New Year Custom Now Associated with Christmas.

The mistletoe has for many years been generally associated with the celebration of Christmas, but in fact the cutting of the mistletoe was in honor of the New Year.

The Druids were summoned to meet at this time by the supreme pontiff. The priests came forth from their forests and traversed their various districts, inviting the faithful to follow them with the cry of kal (first day of the year) or kalonna (gifts) to attend the holy ceremony of gui (mistletoe) of the New Year.

The supreme pontiff of the Druidical order was, as it were, its pope. Immense numbers of the clergy and laity were present at the fete. The ceremony opened with a search for the famous mistletoe upon a tree of thirty years' growth, and the mistletoe so found was to become by its consecration the pancristrum or panacea for all woes.

When the mistletoe was found, a triangular altar of earth was raised at the foot of the tree on which it had been discovered, and then commenced a procession. First marched the Engali, conducting two white bulls, which had never been subjected to a yoke. These were followed by the bards, who sang hymns in honor of the Supreme Being. Next came the novices, students and disciples, accompanied by a herald in white. Then followed the most ancient pontiffs—one carrying bread that was to be offered up; the second two vessels—one filled with water and the other with wine, and the third a hand made of ivory attached to a wand, symbolical of justice and power. Next came the clergy, preceded by the supreme pontiff in a white robe and wearing a girdle of gold, and the procession closed with the nobles and the people.

The cortege having arrived beneath the tree, the officiant, after prayers, burned a morsel of bread and poured some wine and water on the altar and divided what remained among the assistant priests. This done, he ascended the tree and cut off with a golden sickle the mistletoe and dropped it into the robe of one of the principal pontiffs, who received it with profound reverence. The supreme pontiff, aided by the Enbagi, then immolated the two bulls and concluded the religious ceremony by praying, with his arms raised, that God would permit his benediction to rest upon the gift he was about to distribute among the people, then prostrate upon the ground.

Immediately afterward the inferior priests distributed as a gift to the assembled multitude particles of the sacred mistletoe. They sent portions also to the temple and to the chieftains, who felt honored in receiving it, and who, as an act of devotion and as a talisman against harm, wore it round their necks in time of war.

Sickness, enchantment and malevolent spirits were expelled by it. Nothing evil was capable of diminishing its celestial power, and lightning itself would not fall upon the house that contained it.—Philadelphia Times.

New Year's Gifts.

In England the observance of New Year's day by the bestowal of gifts dates from the Cæsars. In the Seventeenth century it was customary for the English nobility to send purses of gold to the king. The reason prompting this custom of gifts arose from belief that it was a message drawn from the first things met with on the beginning of a day, week or year, and of course nothing can be more pleasing than a gift. A rejoicing with friends at their escape from the year's dangers, joined to mutual congratulations for the future, by presents and good wishes for the happy continuance of good fortune, is a proper view of life and its duties.

In olden times hospitalities were renewed by offerings called xenia, which was the name bestowed upon New Year's gifts, as serving to renew friendship, one of the greatest blessings imparted by heaven to man: a blessing not fully appreciated by the community at large at the present moment. The Dutch had evidently brought their good old fashioned ideas of friendship with them when they landed here, and they had acquired them before quitting their native land from pretty nearly the same sources as other nations.—Exchange.

An Anecdote of the Olden Time.

In the time of Charles I of England a court jester was cleverly outwitted by a nobleman, who had, according to the custom of the day, presented the jester with a sum of money.

On New Year's morning the jester came into the presence of the nobleman, and received, as he expected, a number of gold pieces. He thought he had not been given enough, so he tossed them in his hand, muttering that they were light. The nobleman saw this, and said, "Prithee, Archy, let me see them again; and, by the way, there is one of them I would be loath to part with."

Naturally enough, perhaps, Archy thought more coins were to be added to his store, so he willingly returned them to his lordship. But the nobleman put them into his pocket, saying, "I once gave my money into the hands of a fool who hadn't the wit to keep it."—Philadelphia Record.

The New Year.

The New Year rises from night's silent tide,
As Venus rose from out the foaming spray,
And with his dimpled arms extended wide
Smiles on the glories of Time's newborn day
With blushing pride upon his tinted cheek,
And love light flashing from his sparkling eye,
He feels a rapture which he dare not speak,
Lest this bright vision fade from earth and sky.

—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Is It?

He had a Christmas frolic
And a New Year's jamboree,
And when he came unto himself
A sadder man was he.
And if he then made good resolves,
And swore them all by thunder,
You good men who have all been there,
Just say if it's a wonder.

—New York Herald.

NOTHING NEW.

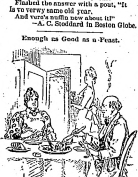
Wee maid Ethel, four times one,
Listened to the timeworn story
Of the Old Year, nearly done,
Of the New Year's coming glory.
And she wondered much and more,
Hearing all the changes ringing,
What new beauties in his store
The young monarch could be bringing.

So when New Year's morning came,
By the pane she took her station;
Eyes alight and cheeks aflame
With the fire of expectation.
Thus but for a moment's space,
Then a cloud of disappointment
Falling o'er the sunny face,
That the world was out of joint, meant.

Quick she turned, with scornful eye
And with dainty nose tiptilted—
And at grandma, sitting by,
Shot a glance that should have wilted.
"Why, what is the matter, dear?"
Flashed the answer with a pout, "It
Is ve verwy same old year,
And vere's nuffin new about it!"

—A. C. Stoddard in Boston Globe.

Enough as Good as a Feast.



Husband—My dear, inasmuch as this is New Year's day I have a suggestion to make.

Wife—What is it?

Husband—Suppose we swear off on that Christmas turkey.

New Year's Advice.

Put by the pipe, put by the bowl,
Put by the word profane,
The seasons in their onward roll
Bring New Year's round again.

Put by the eyes whose deepening glow
Have set your brain awhirl;
Put by ('tis vain advice, we know)
That winsome, witching girl.

All things on which cold reason frowned
Put by—but show your sense
And put them where they'll all be found
A month or six weeks hence.

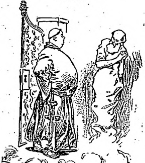
Not Fit.

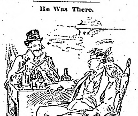


St. Peter (to the ghost of 1892)—What are you looking for around here?

1892—Why, I want to get in.

St. Peter—Well, you'd better shake off some of the habits that you learned on earth first.

He Was There.



Dashaway—I thought you were going to see the old year out at Clubberly's last night? I looked in there about 12, but I didn't see anything of you.

Hail to ninety-three! youngest born of time,
Stealing upon the earth with noiseless tread.
Within thine eyes a prophecy sublime,

Intrusted to thy hands the task to spread
The reign of Freedom where Oppression now
Uprears its ruthless and defiant head,
Child of the voiceful centuries, welcome thou!

The Indians strongly protest against going to White Earth and hope to convince the president that it is for their best interests to remain where they are.

NEW YEAR CUSTOMS.

CHANGES THAT HAVE TAKEN PLACE IN THEIR OBSERVANCE.

The Old Time Round of Calling and Drinking No Longer Fashionable in New York—Country Frolics Are Now Popular—A Sad Story.

There was a time, and that was not too many years ago to count upon the fingers, when New Year's day was the "maddest, merriest day of all the glad New Year," for every man put on his holiday manner and his very best clothes, and called on all the women he knew. In towns and cities where this custom prevailed each house wore a festal air, and each housekeeper spread her table with such attractive viands as could be partaken without ceremony, for, there was no time for sitting down to eating and drinking with a list such as many men had of several hundred calls to be rushed through in that one day.

In New York the custom became at last a tax. There was no real sociability made evident in a hurried handshake and greeting, followed immediately by an equally hurried farewell; and yet there was time for nothing more, and even with all this haste few men could finish the calls written upon their lists, and omissions were apt to give offense.

Pushing young men took advantage of the hurry and flurry of the day to call at houses where entry under other circumstances would not have been possible. Even if they could only bow to the engrossed hostess they could pass on to some of the young women receiving with her, who would naturally suppose them friends of the house. Their cards would be left and possibly included among the guests to be invited on other occasions, which was the end they hoped to gain by their assurance.

Another evil which right thinking people took a grave view of, was the promotion of social drinking which the custom fostered. Men who could not stop for a bite did manage to pause for a glass of wine or cordial, or even a stiff dose of brandy and water, "just to keep the cold out, you know." The result of so many tastes was apt to become disastrous before the day was out, and there were incidents and scenes which were sad to witness.

Worse than all was the fall of some who yielded against their better judgment to the pleading of Circe as she sparkled and beamed and threatened to frown on the young man who refused the glass she held to him in her white gloved hand.

I know a white haired mother whose sad lips refuse to smile because her only daughter is hopelessly insane. The girl was engaged to a man to whom liquor was a terrible temptation, a hereditary craving against which he had silently fought a good fight and triumphed. One New Year's day, the first of their engagement, his fiancee made a point of his taking a glass of wine with her. He refused, she insisted—not knowing his weakness—and at last declared that if he would not yield to her pleasure in such a small matter his affection could not be what he pretended. He could not resist beyond that; but that one glass opened the gate to his enemy, and the passion for drink conquered him and was never overcome. Grief and remorse deprived the gay, thoughtless girl of reason. That is only one story. There are thousands as pitiful, and, feeling the danger which attended the pretty custom of New Year's calls, one can hardly regret its disuse.

In New York and Philadelphia, and to a limited degree in some other places, it is fashionable to make up country parties, leaving town on one of the last days of the year and spending a week in such amusements as the hostess can invent. If she owns a country house she will open it for her guests, or lacking a house she will hire of some farmer all the rooms he can spare, and turn her entertainments into an institution of some of the primitive frolics in which our ancestors were supposed to delight.

Barn dances for the evenings and straw rides for the daylight are among the amusements offered on these occasions, and for variety the Halloween tests or ceremonies are introduced, and the gay visitors toss apple skins, float apples, name chestnuts and eat hard boiled eggs with salt, filling the cavity made by taking out the yolk, agreeably to the old tradition that a dream would follow in which the thirsty one's lover would bring a drink.

For those who stay at home the festivities which belong to the day are not overwhelming, being generally confined to a family dinner, and possibly the theater or a reception in the evening. It is not a day for family gatherings, like Christmas or Thanksgiving, and, as the usual avocations are relinquished, time seems unoccupied and the day is not altogether enjoyable.

But the New Year deserves a form of celebration as well as the other anniversaries, and those who mold and lead society should inaugurate some especial entertainment or custom by which we may enliven the day.—New York Recorder.

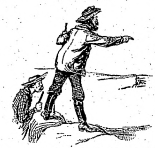
CHAPTER VI.



"Poor Jim—they've got him!"

Meanwhile what has happened inside the fort?

Joe had been gone a full hour, and the captain felt sanguine that he had succeeded in passing out before the fact of his going was communicated to all. Bess for one had missed him, and had anxiously wondered why and where he was detained. When her father told her the news she received it in silence, but had he been looking more closely he would have seen her face flush and grow pale even in the darkness.

Men will peril their lives for men, but take a thousand risks for the woman they love. Intuition told her that Joe was taking the terrible odds for her, and she knelt and prayed God to bring him safely through.

The evening grew into night. The Indians had removed the last of their dead and wounded, broken their fast and planned anew.

If left alone, even surrounded as they were, some of the garrison might sleep. To prevent this and to harass and annoy and torture body and mind a score of redskins secured positions where they were safe from bullets and began a steady fire upon the fort. They did not expect their bullets to wound or kill, but the fire was to harass and annoy.

The captain of the wagon train understood this, and he advised each defender to shelter himself as safely as possible and return no answering shot unless further danger menaced.

Thus midnight came and went.

The horses began to betray their sufferings for water, but their discipline was wonderful. They realized the situation as fully as the men, and a low, kind word or a caress quieted each one for the time being. Not one of the animals had had a drop for twenty-four hours when the train was halted, and every hour after that meant suffering. About midnight the light breeze died entirely away and a heavy dew began to fall. The men licked the rocks for the moisture and felt relieved. The horses licked at the earth—the wagon covers—the stones about them and cooled their parched tongues and delayed the end.

Between midnight and daylight the Indian attacks, if he plans a night attack at all. There was a rush for the gold in the Black Hills. Every hour the train held out increased the chances of rescue by another train coming into the region. Every hour that the Indians dallied there let in a party from some other quarter.

They must strike quickly or the game might slip through their hands.

At about half past one o'clock in the morning the ground for half a mile around the fort would have presented a queer sight had a flood of light been suddenly turned on. It was covered with creeping, crawling savages, each one armed with knife and tomahawk. They closed in from all sides, their movements directed by what seemed to be the barking of a wolf.

The fusillade had slackened a little, but had not by any means been abandoned while carrying out the other plan. The Indians figured that the gold hunters would be scattered to watch the entire circle of breastworks, and that a rush from all sides at once must carry them over at some point.

The human serpents were creeping up for the dash. When the signal came every warrior would leap to his feet, sound his warwhoop and dash for the breastworks. Then for victory.

Now and then a suspicious sound came to the ears of the anxious listeners, and ere long the captain was satisfied as to what move was intended. If he could not concentrate his force a rush would end in a butchery. There were fifteen saddle horses tied among the wagons. Under his orders each one of them was loosened and led clear of the vehicles toward the low wall in which the Indians had charged before. The animals stood in a bunch, heads up and ears working. They knew that danger menaced, and each was ready to spring at the first alarm.

The men were now concentrated to defend three sides of the irregular circle. Each one had his Winchester and at least one revolver, and they were nerved up for desperate fighting. For half an hour before the attack was made Bess had been crouching behind the rocks by her father's side. Every man who could reach her with his whispers had advised her to retire to the wagon and put herself out of danger, but to each one she had replied:

"Your death means my death. Your safety means my safety. I must stay here and do what I can."

The redskins were within pistol shot when the signal was at last given. In an instant two hundred or more sprang to their feet with a savage yell and dashed forward, and ten seconds later there was a blaze of fire along the breastworks. Full thirty Indians rushed at the unprotected side, and as they neared it without receiving the expected volley, and as some of them grasped the rocks to swing themselves over, their elation could no longer be restrained. Shouts of victory rent the night air, but only to die away in wild yells of terror.

The bunch of horses had bolted from the row behind them, just as the captain had planned for, and spreading out like a fan they thundered straight at the low wall with the momentum of a tidal wave. The Indians could not tell whether the horses were mounted or riderless. Down thundered the living wave upon them, to trample them under foot and crush the life out of some, and a panic instantly resulted.

The attack elsewhere had been fierce and determined. At one or two points warriors had succeeded in scaling the defenses, though only to receive death inside, while others had been shot down at the very muzzle of the rifles. It was a critical moment when the stampede of horses caused a panic and turned the tide of battle. The cries of alarm were heard above the din and the effect was immediate. The entire attacking party began to draw off.

The band of horses were desperate with hunger, thirst and excitement, and after clearing the wall they wheeled to the left and charged right down through the line of Indians, scattering it in the wildest confusion. Bearing still to the left the wave thundered over another portion of the line and then broke sharply away for the forks of the Big Cheyenne, as if the night air had at last borne them the scent of water.

Ten minutes from the sounding of the signal the fight was over. The Indian must win at a dash or his enthusiasm gives out. A dozen or more had been killed and wounded, and the singular action of the horses produced a veritable panic for a few minutes.

"That will be the last time they will charge us," said the captain as the redskins fell back. "From this out it will be a siege."

Three of the whites had been wounded, though not seriously in either case. And as soon as their hurts had been attended to all the men, except five to act as sentinels, were permitted to fling themselves down and catch such sleep as they could. The Indians were allowed to remove their dead without interruption, but when daylight came the blood stains on the sterile soil told of their loss as plainly as if the bodies had been allowed to rest where they fell.

When the sun came up the thirst, which had been alleviated by the dew, returned with greater severity, and now all were actually suffering for water. The team horses were becoming violent, but there was no relief.

"We must hold on somehow until another morning," said the captain as the men gathered around him. "By that time Joe will be here with the party he set out to find, or we will be sure that we have nothing to hope for. Then we'll cool our tongues with the blood of the horses. Where's the gal?"

"Asleep," replied Harkins, "and never a complaint of thirst, though I know she's suffering as much as the rest of us."

"I was right beside her when the charge was made," said another of the men, "and know she fired six bullets into the screeching mob swarming down upon us. The gal's clear grit, and if I had ten drops of water she should have nine of 'em."

The Indians had not opened fire, much to the surprise of the trainmen, nor yet was a single one seen in any direction. When two hours of daylight had passed without a change in this state of affairs, the men began to wonder if the last bloody repulse had not disheartened the redskins and resulted in their withdrawal.

"Wait!" was the grim reply of the captain as his opinion was asked.

Nine o'clock came, and nothing was yet in view.

"I tell you," said one of the trainmen, as all gathered to discuss the question, "we've given 'em all they want, and a little more, and they have thrown up the fight. I'll bet my horse there isn't a living red within ten miles of us."

"Just what I say!" added a second. "No Indians ever made could stand such a drubbing and toe the scratch again."

"Then let's be off for the forks!" exclaimed four or five in chorus.

"Stop!" commanded the captain, who had stood one side leaning on his rifle and seemingly bent on a study of the earth.

"What for?"

"To save all our lives!" was the quiet answer. "The redskins have simply withdrawn behind the ridges to bait us out. It is simply one of their cunning tricks."

"Nothing goes to show it," growled one of the men.

"Something would go to show it the moment the wagons moved out. Does it stand to sense that a force still ten to one are going to draw off unless threatened? They want plunder and they want revenge. They attempted to rush us and got worsted, but they know our fix. They know we haven't a drop of water and they know we must shoot ourselves or surrender within a couple of days. If we move out we shall be butchered before we have gone a mile."

"I don't believe in your theories," was the blunt reply of the man. "I believe they have gone off. I'm so sure of it that I'm willing to scout all over the ridges."

"You'll go to your death."

"Pooh! I'll come back to prove that you don't know redskin natur as well as you think for."

"I warn you not to go," said the captain, as the man began saddling one of the team horses.

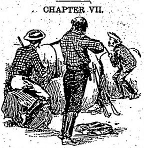
"I'll bring back the scalp locks of the hull caboodle!" laughed the man, and two minutes later he leaped his horse over the barricade, swung his hat to those left behind him and cantered off to the north. He could be seen for half a mile. He halted at the crest of a swell and turned to the left, and as he galloped forward he was soon hidden from view by a ridge as high as the plateau and three-quarters of a mile away.

The men were watching and listening when a cry of alarm was heard from the ridge, and a moment later the trainman's horse came flying over the swell at his fastest pace and made direct for the inclosure.

"Poor Jim—they've got him!" whispered the captain, as he climbed upon the rocks to get a wide range of vision.

To be taken captive by hostile Indians means more than death. Aye! a bullet in the brain at the moment of capture would be an act of mercy to the poor prisoner.

CHAPTER VII.



The captain rested it across the rocks.

The captain was right in his suspicions.

The besieging force of savages, disheartened at their bloody repulse, had quietly withdrawn behind the ridges in hopes to lure the white men from their stronghold.

They would have waited until the wagons were strung out in line and pressing forward, and then a charge would have brought victory. The man who volunteered to act as scout had betrayed the plot. His willfulness would cost him his life, but it would save twenty-three others.

Two minutes after that cry of alarm had reached the men in the fort the Indians could be seen all about them. Concealment was useless, and the red demons circled about the fort on their ponies and kept up such a yelling that one would have thought they regarded sound as powder and bullet. They kept up the hubbub for an hour, and then dismounted out of rifle range to rest.

"We shall hear from that renegade before long," said the captain, as he noted a crowd of Indians at a certain point. "Have any of you men got an old fashioned rifle?"

"I have," replied a man named Peters. "It's not only old style, but heavy enough to use as artillery. I brought it along because I couldn't even give it away at Brule."

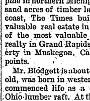
PINE THE SOURCE OF HIS WEALTH.

A Michigan Millionaire Who Grew Rich as a Lumberman.

Hon. Delos A. Blodgett, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has retired from active business life, and his immense and varied interests will be managed by younger heads and hands. He has just given his son, John W. Blodgett, one-third of all his possessions; to his son-in-law, Edward Lowe, and wife, a second third, and he retains the remainder, the young men looking after it all. His property thus divided, aggregates in value, estimated on a conservative basis, $7,200,000, and includes nearly half a million acres of timber land in the south, the largest remaining tract of standing pine in northern Michigan, several thousand acres of timber land on the Pacific coast, The Times building and other valuable real estate in Chicago, several of the most valuable bits of business realty in Grand Rapids, and other property in Muskegon, Cadillac and other points.



DELOS A. BLODGETT.

Mr. Blodgett is about sixty-seven years old, was born in western New York and commenced life as a deckhand on an Ohio lumber raft. At the age of twenty-three he went to Michigan and took charge of a lumber camp on the Muskegon river as foreman. He invested his surplus earnings and all he could borrow in pine lands at government prices, and in time was operating on his own account. He continued to invest in pine lands, and when the boom came after the panic of 1872 his holdings made him rich, and he has steadily been adding to his wealth since by active operations and shrewd investments. He has two children, a son and a daughter. His son, John W. Blodgett, inherits his father's tastes for business, and is already independently rich in his own right without drawing upon the millions just bestowed upon him.

Early Mental Development.

Both common observation and the closest scientific study have made it plain that youth is the period of sense ascendency. From this most important conclusions follow, which we cannot ignore without paying a heavy penalty. Attention has been called to the infant in order to show that, prior to all school education, nature asserts herself and points the way in which the human brain and mind develop. Any education that overlooks these facts is directly against the organization we possess, and must be more or less of a failure.—Wesley Mills, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

Crystallized nitrogen is one of the greatest chemical curiosities. By cooling nitrogen gas down to 807 degs. below the freezing point, and then allowing it to expand, solid snowlike crystals are formed.

English gunpowder is composed of seventy-five parts of saltpeter, ten of sulphur and fifteen of carbon. Proportions are often slightly varied.

You will remember the condition I was in five years ago, when I was afflicted with a combination of diseases, and thought there was NO HELP FOR ME. I tried all kinds of medicines, and scores of eminent physicians. My nerves were prostrated, producing dizziness, heart-trouble and all the ills that make life miserable. I commenced to take DR. MILES' NERVINE and in three months I WAS PERFECTLY CURED. In my travels each year, when I see the thousands of physical wrecks, suffering from nervous prostration, taking prescriptions from local physicians who have no knowledge of their case, and whose death is certain, I feel like going to them and saying, "GET DR. MILES' NERVINE AND BE CURED." In my profession, where there are so many sufferers from overwork, mental prostration and nervous exhaustion, brought on by the character of the business engaged in, I would recommend "MILES' NERVINE" as a sure cure for all suffering from these causes.

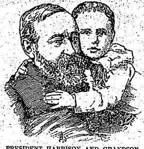
THE TIES OF LOVE.

They Bind Together the Aged Statesman and the Laughing Child.

The joys and sorrows of the great have a strange charm for the mass of mankind. Cicero thundering against Catiline is a spectacle for scholars, but Cicero weeping over his daughter and seeking in his philosophy for some assurance that Tullia still lived is a scene that touches the universal heart in 1892 as powerfully as in the Augustan age. Mr. Cleveland and General Harrison are to most Americans but as political abstractions, but Baby Ruth and Baby McKee are known and loved in many a domestic circle where the questions of protection and revenue tariff are scarcely better understood than the Huttonian theory or the precision of the equinoxes.

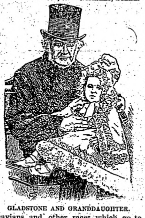


PRESIDENT HARRISON AND GRANDSON.

It is perhaps a delicate matter to touch upon, but surely every American must feel a certain sort of pride that in the very climax of the heat and fury of the late political campaign there was a universal pause and expression of profound sympathy when the beloved lady of the White House obeyed the last dread summons. In Great Britain it was and is the same. The domestic joys and sorrows of Mr. Gladstone touch the popular heart, and it is a fact well worth noting that Mr. Gladstone and President Harrison have during all their political life found their rest and recreation in the domestic circle. It is a characteristic of our greatest men in both nations.

Mr. Gladstone has met with many a bad knockdown, but when the first smart was over he went home to Hawarden, chopped down a few trees, romped with his grandchildren and emerged in a few days serene and refreshed. Benjamin Harrison, despite his great ancestry, had rather a hard struggle in early life, but from the very day when the cultured and popular Miss Scott, the pride of Oxford (O.) schools, gave him her hand and heart domestic life has been his real life, and since his grandchild came to cheer his hours of weariness no other interest has given him so much abiding joy.

Details like these are not trivial. They only illustrate that trait which makes Great Britain and America the leading nations of the earth—domestic life, domestic love! The people of the British isles of all races, the Germans, Scandinavians and other races which go to make America—these are the races with whom the home life is first. So long as this is so all the people will read with delight of how Lincoln romped with his mischievous Tad, and how Garfield indulged in "pillow fights" with his sons. And with not less pleasure they will read that President Harrison is never so happy as when holding his little grandson, and a smile will join with something near akin to tears when they read that the apparently stern old Gladstone holds his youngest grandchild with such timorous tenderness that even the women laugh at him.



GLADSTONE AND GRANDDAUGHTER.

The Virginia Islands.

Chincoteague, which is the most populous of the Virginia islands, has from 300 to 400 wild ponies roaming its pastures. Wallop's island, hard by, now the property of some New York and Brooklyn politicians, who have a clubhouse there, has been a cattle pasture for generations, perhaps for centuries, and half a dozen named or nameless islands between Wallop's and Hog island have half wild cattle or hogs feeding on their rank salt grass. These creatures are untended the year round, and are penned once a year for branding. The cattle are small, sharp horned creatures, and the hogs are of the tall razorbacked variety common in the pine forests of the mainland. When cattle or swine are to be brought ashore they are driven, a score or so together, upon the decks of a railed scow and towed astern of a sailing craft of some sort.

Peru's Financial Affairs.

The customs receipts of Peru for 1891, officially reported at $5,785,942, show a decrease as compared with those of the previous year, but the total revenue of the republic exhibits a comparative increase. The revenues derived from all sources amounted to $8,808,042, against an expenditure of $8,179,981, which left a surplus of $428,061. The Peruvian legislature has under consideration a bill for reforming the customs which, if passed, will put an end to government warehouses and substitute private warehouses instead. It is also proposed to introduce the warrant system into Peru.

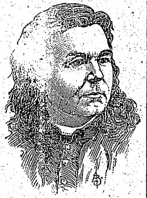
WROTE WAR SONGS.

TWO POETS WHOSE FAME WILL ENDURE FOR AGES.

Father Ryan Was a Champion of the Confederacy, and Julia Ward Howe Is the Author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

The faithful priest and ardent Virginian, Father Abram Joseph Ryan, was but forty-six years old at death, yet measuring time by its experiences he may be said to have lived two ordinary lives. He was in a way dedicated to the priesthood from his birth, for his mother was a woman of the most devoted piety, and even in his boyhood days in Norfolk, Va., he showed a marked tendency to the study and contemplation of divine things. He had, however, scarcely completed his preliminary studies and been ordained to the priesthood when the civil war began, and he and his brother David were soon in the Confederate camp sharing in all the hardships of the soldier.

What a strange contrast does the life of Julia Ward Howe present! At first view it would seem that the supposed or conventional mentality of sex had been reversed: that the man was all fervent emotion and sentiment, the woman all hard, cold logic. She was from the start a Unitarian, he a Catholic; she the daughter of a well to do banker and a cultured wife, reared in comparative luxury and trained in the severest schools of fashionable self restraint, and he thrown at once upon a career of self denial and called to complete his education in the fiercest conflict of the age.



FATHER RYAN.

When the Confederacy went down Father Ryan was almost heartbroken. His "Conquered Banner," written soon after Lee's surrender and probably the best known of all his poems, is indeed a psalm of sorrow. He lived to become reconciled and to do good work as a journalist and lecturer, but realized long before his friends did that his span of life was to be short. On March 22, 1886, he entered the Franciscan convent of St. Bonifacius, at Louisville, and one month later died at the age of forty-six. Next to the "Conquered Banner" probably his feelings are best expressed in his poem, "The Sword of Robert Lee:"

> Forth from its scabbard, pure and bright,
> Flashed the sword of Lee!
> Far in front of the deadly fight,
> High o'er the brave in the cause of right
> Its stainless sheen, like a beacon light,
> Led us to victory.
>
> . . . .
> Forth from its scabbard! How we prayed
> That sword might victor be!
> And when our triumph was delayed,
> And many a heart grew sore afraid,
> We still hoped on while gleamed the blade
> Of noble Robert Lee.
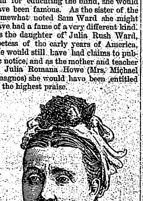
> Forth from its scabbard all in vain
> Bright flashed the sword of Lee.
> 'Tis shrouded now in its sheath again:
> It sleeps the sleep of our noble slain,
> Defeated, yet without a stain,
> Proudly and peacefully.

Father Ryan stood alone. Julia Ward Howe is but one—though by far the greatest one—of a talented and eminent family. As the wife and assistant of Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, the philanthropist and inventor of the latest system for educating the blind, she would have been famous. As the sister of the somewhat noted Sam Ward she might have had a fame of a very different kind. As the daughter of Julia Rush Ward, poetess of the early years of America, she would still have had claims to public notice, and as the mother and teacher of Julia Romana Howe (Mrs. Michael Anagnos) she would have been entitled to the highest praise.



JULIA WARD HOWE.

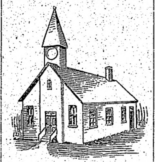
But far beyond all this she is to be honored for herself alone and to be immortal as the author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." No quotation is necessary. Every well read American can repeat the soul stirring lines. It only remains to add that the author was born in New York city May 27, 1819, and early in life became noted as a linguist and philosophic writer; that she has preached in Unitarian pulpits in many places, has written many books and done much good work in many lines and still lives in the enjoyment of health and honors. Her son, Henry Marion, is an engineer of note, and her second daughter, Maud, is a well known writer

THE CURES AT CANTON.

A Minnesota Village Where Miracles of Healing Are Performed.

Fillmore county is in the southeastern part of Minnesota. Canton village is in the southwestern part of Fillmore county. In Canton village is a small Catholic chapel called St. Michael's; that chapel has a small spire; that spire has a small window, and in that window there is, or recently was, a phenomenon which many people considered a miracle.

It was a picture of a woman holding an infant child. Neither the woman nor the child looked at all like the standard pictures of the Madonna and infant Jesus, as the child represented a very chubby and broad jawed baby of the healthy western type, while the woman bore the likeness of a stout Swedish or Norwegian nursegirl. Nevertheless there they were. There was no way of accounting for their being there, and imagination did the rest. It was considered a miracle, there was a rush of visitors, "miraculous cures" were reported, and now Canton is celebrated.



ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH.

The story is very curious. The circular window had been without glass for some time when Father Jones ordered a new one from the only store in the village and had it put in place. The sun was shining full on the glass when the glazier left it, and a few minutes later a little girl on the opposite side of the street cried out, "Oh, see the pretty picture!"

Passersby followed the line of her pointing finger and saw the image in the glass. A crowd collected, and Father Jones, the village priest, was sent for. He saw it and so did all the rest, but Catholic priests are as a rule very wary of giving encouragement to such things, and he decided that it was in the glass originally. He had that glass taken out and another put in, but the picture came again, not so boldly outlined as before, but still plain enough to be recognized. Father Jones then went up inside the spire and looked through the glass, but on that side it was perfectly clear and free from lines of any kind.

Bishop Cotter, of that diocese, was then consulted and pronounced it a delusion, and as thousands of people were crowding the little village to see the wonder he ordered the glass taken out. Meanwhile an invalid suffering from an incurable disease entered the church to pray and went away completely cured, as he alleged. This started a second pilgrimage. A boy with curvature of the spine entered the church and went away straight and sound. Then all the cripples and invalids of that section thronged to Canton, and at last accounts the little village of four or five hundred people was literally overcrowded with the lame, sick, blind and maimed.

It is, to say the least, a puzzling affair. It is a standing rule in the Catholic church that no event is to be considered miraculous until every possible natural explanation is disproved and every reasonable doubt destroyed. One explanation, and the one generally accepted by skeptics, is that some talented photographer or manipulator of lenses has been amusing himself by transferring an image from some distant point of vantage, the process being the same as that used in producing the stage "ghosts," which excited such wonder some twenty years ago. But what about the "cures" of which over a score are now reported? It's a very pretty problem as it stands.

Curious Scene at the World's Fair.

The other day the Turks consecrated the grounds on which the Turkish pavilion of the World's fair will be erected. First they killed a large white sheep as a sort of insurance to prevent Allah from destroying the building. A hundred men in bulging breeches, rimless red fez and red slippers stood around the sheep. One prayed, another tied a bandage over the eyes of the sheep, and Fahri Bey cut the animal's throat. After this everybody went to the Turkish village, and the sheep was there cooked and eaten.

He May Be Speaker.

Hon. William Sulzer will this winter serve his fourth term in the New York assembly as representative of the present Fourteenth district of New York city, and is a candidate for the speakership. For a man of his age he has a very enviable record. He was born March 18, 1863, in the Seventeenth ward of New York, obtained his education in the city common schools, studied law and was admitted to the bar as soon as he reached the age of twenty-one. From his schoolboy days he has been an ardent and active Democrat and has made a special study of all questions directly affecting the laboring men. His record on labor questions [illegible] given him an extraordinary strength [illegible] all the labor organizations, and he is one of the very few politicians emphatically indorsed by all the workingmen's organs. He was first elected in 1889 and has since been re-elected yearly. His votes and speeches on the free lecture bill, tunnel bill and anti-Pinkerton bill, as well as other labor measures, attracted much attention and elicited warm approval

Order to Show Cause on Filing Petition to Sell Land.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss
In Probate Court Special Term, December 15th. 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Peter G. Alsson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. P. Sandberg setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of the real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court on Monday the 16th day of January 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 15th day of December, A. D. 1892.

C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallalieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

It originated in a livery barn and threatened the whole village west of the track.

Wm. Newkom, of Ada, while out hunting a fortnight or so since shot at a large eagle and winged it so that it was captured after a struggle in which the eagle was badly used up but recovered its usual vivacity after a few days and became quite tame. On Saturday last he sent it up to Earnest Rolsch, but Earnest decided after he saw it that he did not want it and sent it back.

Our senior editor was made the recipient of a fine box of Brown's best cigars—for a Christmas gift with the compliments of that prince of good fellows, H. F. Brown of the Second street cigar factory. Mr. Brown started in the manufacturing of cigars in this city a few years ago, with himself and a boy, and now has an establishment giving employment to a dozen men or more and a business that extends far beyond the city limits in every direction. Few there are in this upper country, who smoke, who have not enjoyed one of "Brown's Selects," and once having tried them few care for any other brand. The fact that he keeps so many hands busy constantly to keep up with his orders speaks eloquently of the trade he has, by industry and enterprise built up in our midst. The JOURNAL wishes him success and many many returns of the day.

F. E. Hunt, of Red Lake Falls was in the city on Tuesday.

For plain or fancy job printing call at the JOURNAL office.

Hon. Wm. Carleton was in the city from Angus on Saturday.

The banks and the post-office observed Monday as a holiday.

Peter Stuhl has bought out Joseph Netzer's saloon, in the Germania house.

Mrs. Will Himmelsback and son are visiting with Mrs. S. L. Collins in the city.

A. G. Gallasch is off for a holiday visit with friends in the southern part of the state.

The event of the season will be the band dance at McKinnon's hall on Monday evening next.

The various churches had their Christmas trees on Monday evening and a jolly good time.

A. C. Schmidt, the painter, was on the sick list last week—no, it was several weeks before Christmas day so that wasn't it.

The JOURNAL office has been rushed with Christmas work to its utmost capacity. Thanks friends we will keep up with it if there are printers enough in the state.

Barnesville Review:—Mr. Fred Mix of Crookston, son of Major Mix is the new agent for the Great Northern at this place in place of Mr. Bell. Mr. Mix has had lots of experience in railroad matters and stands high with the officials as shown by his appointment to such an important station. We trust he will find Barnesville a pleasant place to live.

The Crookston cornet band is making great preparations for their dance of McKinnon hall on Monday evening next. Everybody is taking a ticket whether they dance or not as the proceeds go to aid the band. All who enjoy the mazy dance may rest assured of having a good time for the boys always provide amply for their guests.

M. R. Brown informs the JOURNAL that he has a lot of immigration matter, all put up and stamped and if any of our readers wish to post their friends on the good points of this country all they have to do is to call at Mr. Brown's office and get a supply. He has an abundance in either English or German which he will be glad to see go forth on its mission.

E. M. McCaslin drove up to our office on Saturday and remarked that he was quite anxious to have us sample a bit of butter that he had in the sleigh, and as such snaps generally catch us we consented. Having partaken of that butter—about the only nice thing we did get to eat for Christmas—we are prepared to announce that it was decidedly slick—"slicker than grease" and such butter! Almost equal to the choicest June article. In talking about his first year in the country (he came here in '91) Mr. McCaslin said that he could not brag much about making big money in wheat but said that he was doing splendidly this winter with butter. He takes special pains to make a gilt-edged article and gets an extra price for it—five cents above the market, and can sell all he can make. He will be in good shape to go to work next spring but thinks he shall deal sparingly in wheat, which is a good idea.

A call at Dr. Dampier's new and elegant apartments last Saturday found the genial doctor as cosy as a bug in a rug. You first enter the reception room, which is nicely fitted up and furnished and if the doctor is not busy you are ushered into his private office—which fronts on Broadway. Here you find an elegantly furnished room—that makes it seem a pleasure to talk about your bodily ailments, next, if your case is a broken neck, or somedings like dot, you are ushered into the operating room for amputation. This room, like the rest is so nicely fitted up with all of the paraphernalia needed in the business that it really must be a pleasure to be amputated, if it could be done in that room—and after you are nicely amputated to the Queen's taste you can slip one side and wash up—hot and cold water as you like. Next you are ushered into a room adjoining on the west that the doctor calls his "catch-all" and from this room you can go out into the hall and walk home if the amputation has not interferred with the operations of your pedals. Or maybe it was catarrh that ailed you? Like enough. If so we nearly forgot to mention the new fangled machine the doctor has recently imported at great expense with which he can pump your head so full of air that you don't know what bothers you most. The business is said to be a dead shot on the catarrh business, however and the doctor told us on the quiet that very many had derived much benefit from its use—not having the catarrh we can't speak from actual experience. Our visit convinced us that the doctor is nicely located, with every convenience and it is very pleasant to call there when you need mending.

Attend the band dance on Monday evening next.

Chip in your dollar for a ticket to the band dance and help the boys out.

W. F. Bugg was over from Grand Forks to take his Christmas dinner at home.

Halvor Steenerson left for Hillsboro N. D. on Monday evening where he goes to take a hand in some liquor cases.

John Wyatt had his hands severely burned on Christmas eve extinguishing the blaze which had caught in a Christmas tree.

M. E. Bartlett was summoned to his old home at Clifton Springs, N. Y. by news of the serious illness of his father and left on Tuesday night.

The Commercial hotel set up a big dinner on Christmas day to its guests. The menu cards—gems in their way were printed at the JOURNAL office.

Lots of wood coming to the city now-a-days. We were told that on Tuesday 43 carloads came in on the Fosston branch and it was not much of a day for wood, either.

B. F. McKay, of the Echo, Drayton N. P., was in the city on Monday visiting his old friends in this city. Mac used to be a resident of Crookston and has not lost his interest in the place yet.

News of the failure of E. S. Corser, of Minneapolis, was this week received with regret by his many friends in this city. He owned a large farm near the city and an elevator in South Crookston.

L. J. Columbus returned from his trip to Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls and Fertile where he had played the Northern Lights company two nights each, and says that he just about paid expenses of the trip.

The St. Louis hotel had some handsome menu cards printed at this office to do justice to the elegant spread that mine host Jerome set up to his patrons and friends. Frank believes thoroughly in the motto "Live and let live."

Night clerk Leibig of the Commercial went over to Fisher Wednesday and drove out in the country a few miles. He froze his ears, nose and toes slightly, and swears he'll not drive out again in the winter time—not even with his best girl.

Miss Nellie B. Perry of Quincy, Ill., a graduate of the Gem City Business college of Quincy, Ill., and also of the Normal school of Dixon, Ill., has accepted a position in the Crookston Business college and will have charge of the shorthand and English department. She is expected about the 1st of January. The winter term of the college opens on January 2d, 1893.

A private letter from our old-time friend, W. H. Box, of Tacoma, Wash., assures us of his continued good health as also that of his family. His business, though not making him independently rich is very good and increasing all of which we are glad to hear. Mr. Box threatens to re-visit the scenes and friends of his Polk county home Some time next summer.

On Monday evening about 7:45 the fire department was summoned to attend to a blaze in Ellingbo's lunch room and very soon had the incipient blaze under control. The fire caught into the partition from a gasoline stove but was very short-lived after the fire laddies turned the hose on it. The building and contents was owned by S. Sundet and rented to Mr. Ellingbo. No insurance. So slight was the damage done that Mr. Ellingbo had the lunch room all running again on Tuesday evening as though nothing had happened.

August Walters, the well-known brewery man of Crookston, died at eight o'clock on Monday evening, aged 48 years and 8 months. Mr. Walters came to Crookston in 1878, and with Senator H. Burkhardt and Wm. Stuart built the Crookston brewery which they ran for a few years when Mr. Stuart retired and the firm became Burhhardt & Walters. Later Mr. Walters purchased Mr. Burkhardt's interest and was conducting the business alone when he died. A year or two ago he was taken with dropsy and in 1891 he went to Germany to consult a noted specialist by whom his case was pronounced incurable, and he returned home to die, but to the surprise of everybody he began to get better and was soon able to be about and attend to his business. He continued improving until last week when he took cold and rapidly sank, until at 8 o'clock on Monday afternoon the end came. Mr. Walters was a member of the Odd Fellows lodge of this city which order takes full charge of the funeral obsequies. He was also a member of Col. Cobham Post, No. 90, G. A. R. He was heavily insured carrying two or three life policies. He leaves a wife and eight children—five boys and three girls to mourn his loss. The funeral takes place at two o'clock this afternoon, the Rev. O. H. Elmer officiating.

The Fair is the place to get your holiday goods.

W. A. Hammond, of the JOURNAL, spent Christmas in Bismarck, N. D., his former home.

J. T. Knight, of Red Lake Falls, was shaking hands with his friends in the city on Wednesday.

Geo. Ralph starts next week with a crew for the Red Lake Indian Reservation for surveying purposes.

S. M. McKee has moved into the city for the winter and has taken possession of elegant quarters in the Fournet block.

Ed. Cleary and Miss Julia Biever, were united for life on Wednesday afternoon. The JOURNAL extends congratulations.

Mr. John Walters, of LaCrosse, Wis., arrived this (Thursday) morning to attend the funeral of his brother, the late August Walters.

Mr. G. Walters, of Buffalo City, Wis., and Mr. F. Walters, of Alma, Wis., brothers of the late August Walters, with a sister, and Mr. Wohlwend, father of Mrs. Walters arrived on Wednesday morning.

The funeral services of Mrs. Casper Sands took place at the Norwegian church on Ash street on Wednesday at 2 o'clock p. m. A large concourse of friends and neighbors gathered to pay their last sad respects to the departed one.

Rev. Thos. McClary's lecture in the Methodist Episcopal church last Tuesday evening was well attended and much enjoyed by those present. His subject was "The Mission of Mirth," and he proceeded to show that mirth was one of the most necessary forces of the human system. He kept his audience constantly laughing at his comical sayings, absurd remarks and witty jokes.

The Carolyn Gage company opened a three nights engagement at the opera house on Wednesday in "The Honeymoon." The troupe is an excellent one—all artists, and no one will be disappointed in them. The plot of "The Honeymoon" is rather abnormal in that it places the newly made husband too much in the character of an absolute boss whose simple order to the wife must be absolute law in everything—which is wholly unnatural. The company, however made a creditable presentment of a wretched plot.

The Methodists are to be congratulated on their success in solving the problem of heating their church. The furnaces recently placed in position by J. E. O'Brien & Co. prove amply sufficient for the work assigned them as was very conclusively proven by their work last Sunday. Notwithstanding the extreme cold, wind which prevailed all day and succeeded in finding every place in the church was thoroughly warm during both morning and evening service, and the members of the church feel the utmost confidence in promising their friends a comfortable temperature at all their services, no matter how cold the weather may be outside.

Happy New Year.

Let the great world spin forever
Down the ringing grooves of time.
—Tennyson.

The great world has been spinning along quite briskly the past twelve months. Many things have happened to the world at large, and a few to us as individuals—which last are in our eyes the most important of all events of the year. The trains of the various Burlington Route lines have been spinning along during the year on the ringing steel rails—seven thousand miles of them—carrying on all sorts of pleasant or sad journeys some millions of people, in and out of Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Kansas City, Atchison, St. Joseph, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Cheyenne, Deadwood, Minneapolis and St. Paul, and the hundreds of cities and towns between. To the people of the Northwest, our friends and patrons, we say: May the worlds of your individual lives spin merrily and softly during 1893; and if you want to take a spin for pleasure, buy your tickets via the Burlington Route—it goes everywhere. Call on our home agent or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.
